

B

0000023812

0 0000023812 0000023812

EX

67. 136

MICHAEL DE MONTAIGNE

BORN
1533
DIED 1592

·FIRST· ·EDITION· ·PVBLISHED·

IN FRENCH
A.D. 1580-1588
IN ENGLISH
A.D. 1603

THE TEMPLE
CLASSICS

Edited by ISRAEL
GOLLANCZ
M.A.

*En virtute suâ contentus, nobilis arte .
 Italis ore, Anglus pectore, uterq; opere
 Floret adhuc, et adhuc florebit; floreat ultra FLORIVS, hâc specie floridus, optat amans.*

Gul. Houle sculp.

Tam felix utinam,

The
OF MICHAEL
LORD OF

TRANSLATED BY JOHN

The Third BOOKE
VOLUME 1

A Table of the Chapters of the Third Booke

	Page
1. Of profit and honesty	1
2. Of repenting	26
3. Of three commences or societies	48
4. Of diverting or diversion	69
5. Upon some verses of Virgil	86
6. Of Coaches	186
7. Of the incommmodity of greatnesse	221
8. Of the Art of conferring	229

[The remaining chapters of the Third Booke are contained in Vol. 6.]

THE ESSAYES OF
MICHAEL LORD OF MONTAIGNE

The third Booke

CHAP. I

Of profit and honesty

NO man living is free from speaking foolish things; the ill lucke is, to speake them curiously: Paper bullets of the brain

Næ iste magno conatu magnas nugas dixerit.

—TER. Heaut. act, iv, sce, i.

This fellow sure with much a doe,
Will tell great tales and trifles too.

That concerneth not me; mine slip from me with as little care, as they are of smal worth: whereby they speed the better. I would suddenly quit them, for the least cost were in them: Nor do I buy, or sell them, but for what they weigh. I speake unto Paper, as to the first man I meete. That this is true, marke well what

We are full of imperfection

followes. To whom should not treachery be detestable, when Tiberius refused it on such great interest? One sent him word out of Germany, that if he thought it good, Ariminius should be made away by poison. He was the mightiest enemy the Romans had, who had so vilely used them under Varus, and who onely empeached the encrease of his domination in that country. His answer was; that the people of Rome were accustomed to be revenged on their enemies by open courses, With weapons in hand; not by subtill sleights, nor in hugger mugger: thus left he the profitable for the honest. He was (you will say) a cosener. I beleeeve it; that's no wonder; in men of his profession. But the confession of vertue, is of no lesse consequence in his mouth that hateth the same, forsomuch as truth by force doth wrest it from him, and if he will not [admit] it in him, at least, to adorne himselfe he will put it on. Our composition, both publike and private, is full of imperfection; yet is there nothing in nature unserviceable, no not inutility it selfe; nothing thereof hath beene insinuated in this huge universe, but holdeth some fit place therein. Our essence is cymented with crased qualities; ambition, jealousie, envy, revenge, superstition, dispaire, lodge in us, with so naturall a possession, as their image is also discerned in beasts: yea and cruelty, so unnaturall a vice: for in the midst of compassion, we inwardly feelee a kinde of bitter-sweet-pricking of malicious delight, to see others suffer; and children feelee it also:

*Suave mari magno turbantibus æquora ventis,
E terra magnum alterius spectare laborem.*

Unjust
judges

—LUCR. ii. 1.

T'is sweet on ground seas, when windes waves
turmoyle,
From land to see an others greevous toyle.

The seed of which qualities, who should roote out of man, should ruine the fundamental conditions of our life : In matter of policy likewise ; some necessary functions are not onely base, but faulty : vices finde therein a seate, and employ themselves in the stitching up of our frame ; as poysons in the preservations of our health. If they become excusable, because wee have neede of them, and that common necessity effaceth their true property ; let us resigne the acting of this part to hardy Citizens, who sticke not to sacrifice their honours and consciences, as those of old, their lives, for their Countries availe and safety. We that are more weake, had best assume taskes of more ease and lesse hazard. The Common-wealth requireth some to betray, some to lie, and some to massaker : leave we that commission to people more obedient and more pliable. Truly, I have often beene vexed, to see our judges, by fraude or false hopes of favour or pardon, draw on a malefactor, to bewray his offence ; employing therein both cousenage and impudencie. It were fit for justice, and Plato himselfe, who favoureth this custome, to furnish me with meanes more sutable to my humour. T'is a malicious justice, and in my conceit no lesse wounded by it selfe, then by others. I

Montaigne as a negotiator answered not long since, that hardly could I betray my Prince for a particular man, who should be very sorry to betray a particular man for my Prince. And loath not onely to deceive, but that any be deceived in me ; whereto I will neither furnish matter nor occasion. In that little busines I have managed betweene our Princes, amid the divisions and subdivisions, which at this day so teare and turmoile us, I have curiously heeded, that they mistake me not, nor muffled themselves in my maske. The professors of that trade hold themselves most covert ; pretending and counterfeiting the greatest indifference and neerenes to the cause they can. As for me, I offer my selfe in my liveliest reasons, in a forme most mine owne : A tender and young Negotiator, and who had rather faile in my businesse, then in my selfe. Yet hath this been hitherto with so good hap (for surely fortune is in these matters a principal actor) that few have dealt betwene party and party with lesse suspition, and more inward favour. I have in all my proceedings an open fashion, easie to insinuate and give it selfe credit at first acquaintance. Sincerity, plainenesse, and naked truth, in what age soever, finde also their opportunitie and employment. Besides, their liberty is little called in question, or subject to hate, who deale without respect of their owne interest. And they may truely use the answer of Hyperides unto the Athenians, complaining of his bitter invectives and sharpenesse of his speech : Consider not, my masters whether I am free, but whether I be so, without taking ought, or bettering my state by it. My liberty also hath easily discharged me from all suspition of faintnesse, by it's vigor (nor forbearing to speake any thing, though it bit or stung them; I could not have said worse in their absence) and because it carrieth an apparant show of simplicity and carelesnesse. I pretend no other fruit by negotiating, then to negotiate; and annex no long pursuites or propositions to it. Every action makes his particular game, win he if he can. Nor am I urged with the passion of love or hate unto great men; nor is my wil shackled with anger, or particular respect. I regard our Kings with an affection simply lawfull, and meerely civil, neither mooved nor unmoov'd by private interest: for which I like my selfe the better. The generall and just cause bindes me no more then moderately, and without violent fits. I am not subject to these piercing pledges and inward gages. Choller and hate are beyond the duty of justice, and are passions fitting only those, whose reason is not sufficient to hold them to their duty: Utatur motu animi, qui uti ratione non potest, Let him use the motion of his minde, that cannot use reason. All lawfull intentions are of themselves temperate: if not, they are altered into sedicious and unlawful. It is that makes me march every where with my head aloft, my face and heart open. Verily (and I feare not to avouch it) I could easily for a neede, bring a candle to Saint Michaell, and another to his Dragon, as the good old woman. I will follow the best side

Mon-
taine's attitude towards
the great

Neutral-ity in troublous times to the fire, but not into it, if I can choose. If neede require, let Montaigne my Mannor-house be swallowed up in the publike ruine: but if there be no such necessity, I will acknowledge my selfe beholding unto fortune if she please to save it; and for it's safety employ as much scope as my endeavours can afford me. Was it not Atticus, who cleaving to the right (but loosing side) saved himselfe by his moderation, in that generall Shipwracke of the world, amidst so many changes and divers alterations? To private men, such as he was, it is more easie. And in such kinde of businesse, I thinke one dealeth justly, not to be too forward to insinuate or invite himselfe: To hold a staggering or middle course, to beare an unmooved affection, and without inclination in the troubles of his country, and publike divisions, I deeme neither seemely nor honest: Ea non media, sed nulla via est, velut eventum expectantium, quo fortunæ consilia sua applicent, That is not the mid-way, but a mad way, or no way, as of those that expect the event with intent to apply their designes as fortune shall fall out. That may be permitted in the affaires of neighbours. So did Gelon the tyrant of Siracusa suspend his inclination in the Barbarian wars against the Greekes, keeping Ambasdours at Delphos, with presents, to watch on what side the victory would light, and to apprehend the fittest occasion of reconcilment with the victors. It were a kind of treason to do so in our owne affaires and domesticall matters, wherein of necessity one must resolve and take a side ; but for a man that hath neither charge, nor expresse commandement to urge him ; not to busie or entermedle himselfe therein, I holde it more excusable : (Yet frame I not this excuse for my selfe) then in forraine and strangers wars, wherewith according to our laws, no man is troubled against his will. Neverthelessse those, who wholly ingage themselves into them, may carry such an order and temper, as the storme (without offending them) may glide over their head. Had wee not reason to hope as much of the deceased Bishop of Orleans, Lord of Morvilliers ? And I know some, who at this present worthily bestirre themselves, in so even a fashion or pleasing a manner, that they are likely to continue on foote, whatsoever injurious alteration or fall, the heavens may prepare against us. I holde it onely fit for Kings to be angry with Kings : And mocke at those rash spirits, who from the braverie of their hearts offer themselves to so unproportionate quarrels. For one undertaketh not a particular quarrell against a Prince, in marching against him openly and couragiously, for his honour, and according to his duty : If hee love not such a man : hee doth better : at least hee esteemeth him. And the cause of lawes especially, and defence of the auncient state, hath ever found this privilege, that such as for their owne interest, disturbe the same, excuse (if they honour not) their defendors. But wee ought not terme duty (as now a dayes wee do) a sower rigour, and intestine crabbednesse, proceeding of private interest of entrance

Beware
to a quarrel

Double dealing and passion: nor courage a treacherous and malicious proceeding. Their disposition to forwardnesse and mischiefe, they entitle Zeale: That's not the cause doth heate them, 'tis their owne interest: They kindle a warre, not because it is just, but because it is warre. Why may not a man beare himselfe betweene enemies feately and faithfully? Doe it, if not altogether with an equall (for it may admit different measure) at least with a sober affection, which may not so much engage you to the one, that he looke for al at your hands. Content your selfe with a moderate proportion of their favour, and to glide in troubled waters without fishing in them. Th' other manner of offering ones uttermost endeavours to both sides, implyeth lesse discretion then conscience. What knows he to whom you betray another, as much your friend as himselfe, but you will do the like for him, when his turne shall come? He takes you for a villaine: whilst that hee heares you, and gathers out of you, and makes his best use of your disloyalty. For, double fellowes are onely beneficiall in what they bring, but we must looke, they carry away as little as may be. I carry nothing to the one, which I may not (having opportunity) say unto the other, the accent only changed a little: and report either but indifferent or knowne, or common things. No benefit can induce mee to lye unto them: what is entrusted to my silence I conceale religiously, but take as little in trust as I can. Princes secrets are a troublesome charge, to such as have nought to do with them. I ever by my good will capitulate with them, that they trust mee with very little: but let them assuredly trust what I disclose unto them. I alwayes knew more then I wold. An open speach opens the way to another, and draws all out, even as Wine, and Love. Philippedes in my minde, answered King Lysimachus wisely, when hee demaunded of him, what of his wealth or state hee should empарт unto him: Which and what you please (quoth hee) so it be not your secrets. I see every one mutinie, if another conceale the deapth or mysterie of the affaires from him, wherein he pleaseth to employ him, or have but purloyned any circumstance from him. For my part, I am content one tell me no more of his businesse then he will have me know or deale in; nor desire I, that my knowledge exceede or straine my word. If I must needs be the instrument of cozinage, it shall at least be with safety of my conscience. I will not be esteemed a servant, nor so affectionate, nor yet so faithfull, that I be judged fit to betray any man. Who is unfaithfull to himselfe, may be excused if hee be faithlesse to his Master. But Princes entertaine not men by halfes, and despise bounded [and] conditionall service. What remedy? I freely tell them my limits; for, a slave I must not be but unto reason, which yet I cannot compasse: And they are to blame, to exact from a free man, the like subjection unto their service, and the same obligation, which they may from those they have made

The burden of secrets

Mon- and bought ; and whose fortune dependeth partaigne ticularly and expresly on theirs. The lawes no lover have delivered mee from much trouble : they
 of public have chosen mee a side to followe, and appointed life mee a maister to obey : all other superiority and duty, ought to bee relative unto that, and bee restrained. Yet may it not be concluded, that if my affection should otherwise transport mee, I would presently afforde my helping hand unto
 it. Will and desires are a lawe to themselves,
 actions are to receive it of publike institutions :
 All these proceedings of mine, are somewhat dissonant from our formes. They should produce no great effects, nor holde out long among
 us. Innocencie it selfe could not in these times
nor negotiate without dissimulation, nor trafficke without lying. Neither are publike functions of my diet ; what my profession requires thereto,
 I furnish in the most private manner I can.
 Being a childe, I was plunged into them up to the eares, and had good successe ; but I got loose in good time. I have often since shunned meddling with them, seldome accepted and never required ; ever holding my back toward ambition ; but if not as rowers, who goe forward
 as it were backward : Yet so, as I am lesse beholding to resolution, then to my good fortune, that I was not wholly embarked in them.
 For, there are courses lesse against my taste,
 and more comfortable to my carriage, by which if heretofore it had called mee to the service of the common-wealth, and my advancement unto credit in the world : I know that in following the same I had exceeded the reason of my conceite. Those which commonly say against my profession, that what I terme liberty, simplicity and plainenesse in my behaviour, is arte, cunning and subtilty: and rather discretion, then goodnesse; industry then nature; good wit, then good hap; doe mee more honour, then shame. But truely they make my cunning overcunning. And whosoever hath traced mee and nearely looked into my humours, Ile loose a good wager if hee confesse not, that there is no rule in their schoole, could, a midde such crooked pathes and divers windings, square and raport this naturall motion, and maintaine an apparence of liberty and licence, so equall and inflexible; and that all their attention and wit, is not of power to bring them to it. The way to trueth is but one and simple; that of particular profit and benefit of affaires a man hath in charge, double, uneven and accidentall. I have often seene these counterfet and artificiall liberties in practise, but most commonly without successe. They savour of Æsopes Asse: who in emulation of the dogge, layde his two fore-feete very jocondly upon his masters shoulders: but looke how many blandishments the pretty dogge received, under one, so many bastinadoes were redoubled upon the poore Asses backe. Id maxime quemque decet: quod est cujusque suum maxime (Cic. Off. i.): that becomes every man especially, which is his owne especially: I will not deprive cousinage of her ranke, that were to understand the world but ill: I know it

'The way to trueth is but one'

Natural hath often done profitable service, it supporteth,
and legal yea and nourisheth the greatest part of mens justice vacations.

There are some lawfull vices: as many actions, or good or excusable, unlawfull. Justice in it selfe naturall and universall is otherwise ordered, and more nobly distributed, then this other especiall, and nationall justice, restrained and suted to the neede of our pollicie: Veri juris germanæque justitiæ solidam et expressam effigiem nullam tenemus: umbra et imaginibus utimur (Cic. Off. iii.). Wee have no lively nor life-like purtraiture of upright law and naturall justice: wee use but the shaddowes and colours of them. So that wise Dandamys, hearing the lives of Socrates, Pythagoras and Dio-genes repeated, in other things, judged them great and worthy men, but overmuch subjected to the reverence of the lawes: which to authorize and second, true vertue is to decline very much from his naturall vigor: and not onely by their permission, but perswasions divers vicious actions are committed and take place. Ex Senatus consultis plebisque scitis scelera exercentur. Even by decrees of counsell, and by statute-laws are mischiefs put in practise. I follow the common phrase, which makes a difference betweene profitable and honest things: terming some naturall actions which are not onely profitable but necessary, dishonest and filthy. But to continue our examples of treason. Two which aspired unto the kingdome of Thrace, were falne into controversie for their right. The Emperor hindred them from falling together by the eares: the one under colour of contriving some friendly accord by an interview inviting the other to a feast in his house, imprisoned and murthred him. Justice required, that the Romanes should be satisfied for this outrage: some difficulties empeached the ordinary course. What they could not lawfully doe without warre and hazard, they attempted to accomplish by treason: what they could not honestly atchieve, they profitably compassed. For exployting whereof, Pomponius Flaccus was thought most fitte: who trayning the fellow into his Nettes by fained wordes and sugred assurances; in lieu of the favour and honour hee promised him, sent him bound hand and foote to Rome. One traytor over-reached another, against common custome: For, they are all full of distrust, and 'tis very hard to surprize them in their owne arte: witnesse the heavy and dismall experience we have lately felt of it. Let who liste bee Pomponius Flaccus; and there are too-too many that will bee so. As for my part, both my word and faith, are as the rest; pieces of this common body: their best effect is the publicke service: that's ever presupposed with mee. But as, if one should command mee to take the charge of the Rolles or Recordes of the Pallace, I would answere: I have no skill in them: or to bee a leader of Pioners, I would say; I am called to a worthier office: Even so, who would goe about to employ mee, not to murther

The
treachery of Pomponius Flaccus

Oath
of the Egyptian
judges

or poyson, but to lye, betraye, and forswear
my selfe, I would tell him; If I have robbed or stolne any thing from any man, send mee rather to the Gallies. For, a Gentleman may lawfully speake as did the Lacedemonians, defeated by Antipater, upon the points of their agreement: *You may impose as heavy burdens,
and harmefull taxes upon us as you please; but you lose your time, to command us any shameful or dishonest things.* Every man should give himselfe the oath, which the Ægyptian Kings,
solemnly and usually presented to their judges;
Not to swarve from their consciences, what command soever they should receive from themselves to the contrary. In such commissions there is an evident note of ignominie and condemnation. And whosoever gives them you, accuseth
you; and if you conceive them right, gives you them as a trouble and burthen. As much as the publike affaires amend by your endeavours,
your owne empaireth: the better you do, so much the worse doe you. And it shall not bee newe, nor peradventure without shadowe of justice, that hee who setteth you a worke, becommeth your ruine. If treason bee in any case excusable, it is onely then, when t'is employed to punish and betray treason. Wee shall finde
many treacheries, to have beene not refused, but punished by them, in whose favour they were undertaken. Who knowes not the sentence of Fabritius, against Pyrrus his Physition? And the commaunder hath often severely revenged
them on the partie hee employed in them, refusing so unbridled a credite and power, and disavowing so lewde and so vile an obedience. Jaropelc Duke of Russia, solicited an Hungarian Gentleman, to betray Boleslaus King of Polonia, in contriving his death, or furnishing the Russians with meanes to work him some notable mischiefe. This gallant, presently bestirres him in it, and more then ever applying himselfe to the Kings service obtained to bee of his counsell, and of those hee most trusted. By which advantages, and with the opportunity of his masters absence, hee betrayed Vicilia, a great and rich citie to the Russians: which was whollie sakt and burnt by them, with a generall slaughter, both of the inhabitants, of what sexe or age soever, and a great number of nobility thereabouts, whom to that purpose he had assembled. Jaropelc his anger thus asswaged with revenge, and his rage mitigated (which was not without pretext, for Boleslaus had mightily wronged and in like manner incensed him) and glutted with the fruite of treason, examining the ugliness thereof, naked and alone, and with impartiall eyes beholding the same, not distempered by passion, conceived such a remorse, and tooke it so to heart, that hee forthwith caused the eyes of his instrumentall executioner to be pulled out, and his tongue and privy parts to be cut off. Antigonus perswaded the Argyraspides soldiers, to betray Eumenes their generall, and his adversarie, unto him, whom when they had delivered, and he had caused to be slaine; himselfe desired to be

The fate of a traitor

Rewards
of traitors

the Commissary of divine justice, for the punishment of so detestable a trecherie: and resigning them into the hands of the Governor of the Province, gave him expresse charge, in what manner soever it were, to rid himselfe of them, and bring them to some mischievous end. Whereby, of that great number they were, not one ever after sawe the smoake of Macedon. The better they served his turne, the more wicked hee judged them, and the more worthie of punishment. The slave that betraied the corner wherein his master P. Sulpicius lay hid, was set at liberty, according to the promise of Syllas proscription: But according to the promise of common reason, being freed, hee was throwne head-long from off the Tarpeyan rocke. And Glovis King of France, in lieu of the golden armes he had promised the three servants of Cannacre, caused them to be hanged, after they had by his sollicitation betraide their maister unto him. They hang them up with the purse of their reward about their neckes. Having satisfied their second and speciall faith, they also satisfie the generall and first. Mahomet the second, desirous to rid himselfe of his brother (through jealousie of rule, and according to the stile of that race) employed one of his officers in it; who stifled him, by much water powred downe his throate all at once: which done, in expiation of the fact, he delivered the murtherer into the hands of his brothers mother (for they were brethren but by the fathers side) shee, in his presence, opened his bosome, and with hir owne revenging handes Ministers searching for his heart pluckt it out, and cast of crimes it unto dogges to eate. Even unto vile dispositions (having made use of a filthy action) it is so sweete and pleasing, if they may with security, as it were, in way of recompence and holy correction, sowe one sure stitch of goodnesse, and justice unto it. Besides; they respect the ministers of such horrible crimes, as people, that still upbraide them with them, and covet by their deaths to smother the knowledge, and cancell the testimony of their practises. Now if perhaps, not to frustrate the publike neede of that last and desperate remedy, one rewarde you for it: yet, hee who doth it (if hee bee not as bad himselfe) will hould you a most accursed and execrable creature. And deemeth you a greater traytor, then he whom you have betrayed: for with your owne handes, hee touched the lewdnesse of your disposition, without disavowing, without object. But employeth you, as we do out-cast persons in the executions of justice: an office as profitable as little honest. Besides the basenesse of such commissions, there is in them a prostitution of conscience. The daughter of Sejanus, could not in Rome, by any true formall course of lawe, bee put to death, because shee was a virgine: that lawes might have their due course, shee was first deflowred by the common hangman, and then strangled. Not his hand onely, but his soule is a slave unto publike commodity. When Amurath the first, to agravate the Base executioners punishment of his subjects, who had given support unto his sons unnaturall rebellion, appointed their nearest kinsmen to lend their hands unto this execution: I finde it verie honest in some of them, who rather chose unjustly to bee held guiltie of anothers parricide, then to serve justice with their owne. And whereas in some paltrie townes forced in my time, I have seene base varlets for savegarde of their owne lives, yeild to hang their friends and companions, I ever thought them of worse condition, then such as were hanged. It is reported, that Witoldus Prince of Lituania, introduced an order with that nation, which was that the party condemned to die, should with his owne handes make himselfe away; finding it strange, that a third man being guiltlesse of the fact, shoulde bee employed and charged to commit a murther. When an urgent circumstance, or any violent and unexpected accident, induceth a Prince for the necessitie of his estate, or as they say for state matters, to breake his worde and faith, or otherwise forceth him out of his ordinary duty, hee is to ascribe that necessity unto a lash of Gods rod: It is no vice, for hee hath quit his reason, unto a reason more publike, and more powerfull, but surely 'tis ill fortune. So that to one, who asked mee what remedy? I replyde, none; were hee truely rackt betweene these two extreames (Sed videat ne quærat latebra periurio (Cic. Off. iii.). But let him take heede he seeke not a starting hole for perjurie) hee must have done it; but if hee did it sans regret or scruple, if it greeved him not to doe it, 'tis an argument his conscience is but in ill tearmes. Now were there any one of so tender or cheverell a conscience, to whome no cure might seeme worthy of so extreame a remedy: I should prise or regard him no whit the lesse. Hee cannot loose himselfe more handsomely nor more excusable. Wee cannot doe every thing, nor bee in every place. When all is done, thus and thus, must wee often, as unto our last Anker and sole refuge, resigne the protection of our vessell unto the onely conduct of heaven. To what juster necessity can hee reserve himselfe? What is lesse possible for him to do, then what he cannot effect, without charge unto his faith, and imputation to his honour? things which peradventure should bee dearer to him, then his owne salvation, and the safety of his people. When with enfoulded armes hee shall devoutly call on God for his ayde, may hee not hope, that his fatherlie mercie shall not refuse the extraordinary favour, and sinne-forgiving grace of his all powerfull hand, unto a pure and righteous hand? They are dangerous examples, rare and crased exceptions to our naturall rules: wee must yeele unto them, but with great moderation, and heedie circumspection. No private commodity, may any way deserve wee should offer our conscience this wrong: the common-wealth may, when it is most apparant and important. Timoleon did fitlie war-rant and warde the strangenes of his exploite by the teares hee shed, remembring it was with a

'Wee
cannot doe every thing'

The act of Timoleon brotherlie hand hee slew the tyrant. And it neerely pinched his selfe gnawne conscience, that hee was compelled to purchase the common good, at the rate of his honestie. The sacred Senate it selfe, by his meanes delivered from thraldome, durst not definitively decide of so haughtie an action, and rend in two so urgent and different semblances. But the Siracusans having opportunely and at that very instant sent to the Corinthians, to require their protection, and a governour able to re-establish their towne in former majestie, and deliver Sicilie from a number of pettie tyrants, which grievously oppressed the same: they appointed Timoleon, with this new caveat and declaration: That according as hee should well or ill demeane himselfe in his charge, their sentence should incline, either to grace him as the redeemer of his country, or disgrace him, as the murtherer of his brother. This fantasticall conclusion, hath some excuse upon the danger of the example, and importance of an act so different, and they did well, to discharge their judgement of it, or to embarke him some where else, and on their considerations. Now the proceedings of Timoleon in his renowned journie did soone yeelde his cause the cleerer, so worthily and vertuously did hee every way beare himselfe therein. And the good hap, which ever accompanied him in the encombrances and difficulties hee was to subdue in the atchievement of his noble enterprise, seemed to bee sent him by the Gods, conspiring to second, and consenting to favour his justification: This mans end is excusable, if ever any could bee. But the encrease and profit of the publike revenues, which served the Roman Senate for a pretext of the ensuing-foule conclusion I purpose to relate, is not of sufficient force to warrant such injustice. Certaine cities had by the order and permission of the Senate, with mony purchased their libertie, at the hands of L. Sylla. The matter comming in question againe, the Senate condemned them, to be fineable and taxed as before: and the mony they had employed for their ransome, should bee deemed as lost and forfeited. Civill warres do often produce such enormous examples: That we punish private men, forsomuch as they have beleevd us, when wee were other then now wee are. And one same magistrate doth lay the penalty of his change on such as cannot do withal. The Schoolemaster whippeth his scholler for his docility, and the guide striketh the blinde man he leadeth. A horrible image of justice. Some rules in Philosophy are both false and faint. The example proposed unto us of respecting private utility before faith given, hath not sufficient power by the circumstance they adde unto it. Theeves have taken you, and on your oath to pay them a certaine sum of money, have set you at liberty againe: They erre, that say, an honest man is quit of his worde and faith without paying, beeing out of their hands; There is no such matter. What feare and danger hath once forced mee to will and consent unto, I am bound to will and performe being out of danger

'A horrible
image of justice'

Wicked promises may be broken

and feare. And although it have but forced my tongue, and not my will, yet am I bound to make my worde good, and keepe my promise. For my part, when it hath sometimes unadvisedly over-runne my thought, yet have I made a conscience to disavowe the same. Otherwise wee should by degrees come to abolish all the right a third man taketh and may challenge of our promises. Quasi verò forti viro vis possit adhiberi (Cic. Off. iii.). As though any force could be used upon a valiant man. T'is onely lawfull for our private interest to excuse the breache of promise, if wee have rashlie promised things in themselves wicked and unjust. For, the right of vertue ought to over-rule the right of our bond. I have heretofore placed Epaminondas in the first ranke of excellent men, and now recant it not. Unto what high pitch raised hee the consideration of his particular duty? who never slew man hee had vanquished; who for that unvaluable good of restoring his country hir liberty, made it a matter of conscience, to murder a Tyrant or his complices, without a due and formall course of lawe: and who judged him a bad man, how good a citizen soever, that amongst his enemies and in the fury of a battle, spared not his friend, or his hoste. Loe here a minde of a rich composition. Hee matched unto the most violent and rude actions of men, goodnesse and courtesie, yea and the most choise and delicate, that may be found in the schoole of Philosophie. This so high-raised courage, so swelling and so obstinate against sorow, death and povertie, was it nature or arte, made it relent, even to the utmost straine of exceeding tendernesse and debonarety of complexion? Being cloathed in the dreadfull livery of steele and blood, hee goeth on crushing and brusing a nation, invincible to all others, but to himselfe: yet mildely relenteth in the midst of a combat or confusion, when he meets with his host or with his friend. Verily, this man was deservedly fit to command in warre, which in the extremest furie of his innated rage, made him to feelee the sting of courtesie, and remorse of gentlenesse: then when all inflamed, it foamed with furie, and burned with murder. 'Tis a miracle, to be able to joyne any shew of justice with such actions. But it only belongeth to the unmatched courage of Epaminondas, in that confused plight, to joyne mildnesse and facility of the most gentle behaviour that ever was, unto them, yea and pure innocency it selfe. And whereas one told the Mamertins, that statutes were of no force against armed men: another to the Tribune of the people, that the time of justice and warre, were two: a third, that the confused noise of warre and clangor of armes, hindred him from understanding the sober voice of the lawes: This man was not so much as impeached from conceiving the milde sound of civilitie and kindnesse. Borrowed hee of his enemies the custome of sacrificing to the muses (when he went to the warres) to qualifie by their sweetnesse and mildnesse, that martiall furie, and hostile surlinesse? Let us not feare, after so great a master, to hold

The rare
Epami-
nondas

A duty above patriot-ism that some things are unlawfull, even against our fellest enemies : that publike interest, ought not to challenge all of all, against private interest : Manente memoria etiam in dissidio publicorum fæderum privati juris : Some memorie of private right continuing even in disagreement of publike contracts.

—et nulla potentia vires
Præstandi, ne quid peccet amicus, habet :
 —OVID. Pont. i. El. viii. 37.

No power hath so great might,
 To make friends still goe right.

And that all things be not lawfull to an honest man, for the service of his King, the generall cause and defence of the lawes. Non enim patria præstat omnibus officiis, et ipsi conducit pios habere cives in parentes (Cic. Off. iii.). For our countrey is not above all other duties : it is good for the country to have her inhabitants use pietie toward their parents. 'Tis an instruction befitting the times : wee need not harden our courages with these plates of iron and steele ; it sufficeth our shoulders be armed with them : it is enough to dippe our pens in inke, too much, to die them in blood. If it be greatnesse of courage, and th' effect of a rare and singular vertue, to neglect friendship, despise private respects and bonds ; ones word and kindred, for the comon good and obedience of the Magistrate : it is verily able to excuse us from it, if we but alledge, that it is a greatnesse unable to lodge in the greatnesse of Epaminondas his courage. I abhorre the enraged admonitions of this other unruly spirit.

—*dum tela micant, non vos pietatis imago
Ulla, nec adversa conspecti fronte parentes Commoveant, vultus gladio turbante verendos.*

—LUCAN. vii. 320. Cæs.

Utility
no test of honour

While swords are brandisht, let no shew of grace
Once moove you, nor your parents face to face,
But with your swords disturbe their reverend grace.

Let us bereave wicked, bloodie and traiterous dispositions, of this pretext of reason: leave we that impious and exorbitant justice, and adhere unto more humane imitations, Oh what may time and example bring to passe! In an encounter of the civill warres against Cinna, one of Pompeyes
souldiers, having unwittingly slaine his brother, who was on the other side, through shame and sorrow presently killed himselfe; And some yeeres
after, in another civill warre of the said people,
a souldier boldly demanded a reward of his Captaines for killing his owne brother. Falsly doe wee argue honour, and the beautie of an action,
by it's profit: and conclude as ill, to thinke
every one is bound unto it, and that it is honest,
if it be commodious.

Omnia non pariter rerum sunt omnibus apta.

—PROP. iii. El. viii. 7.

All things alike to all
Do not well-fitting fall.

Choose we out the most necessary and most beneficiall matter of humane society, it will be a mariage: yet is it, that the Saints counsell findeth
and deemeth the contrary side more honest, excluding from it the most reverend vocation of men: as wee to our races assigne such beasts as are of least esteeme.

CHAP. II

Of Repenting

Constancy
is but a wavering
dance

OTHERS fashion man, I repeat him; and represent a particular one, but ill made; and whom were I to forme a new, he should be far other then he is; but he is now made. And though the lines of my picture change and vary, yet loose they not themselves. The world runnes all on wheeles. All things therein moove without intermission; yea the earth, the rockes of Caucasus, and the Pyramides of Ægypt, both with the publike and their own motion. Constancy it selfe is nothing but a languishing and wavering dance. I cannot settle my object; it goeth so unquietly and staggering, with a naturall drunkenesse. I take it in this plight, as it is at th' instant I amuse my selfe about it. I describe not the essence, but the passage; not a passage from age to age, or as the people reckon, from seaven yeares to seaven, but from day to day, from minute to minute. My history must be fitted to the present. I may soone change, not onely fortune, but intention. It is a counterroule of divers and variable accidents, and irresolute imaginations, and sometimes contrary: whether it be that my selfe am other, or that I apprehend subjects, by other circumstances and considerations. Howsoever, I may perhaps gaine-say my selfe, but truth (as Demades said) I never gaine-say: Were my mind settled, I would not essay, but resolve my selfe. It is still a Prentise and a probationer. I propose a meane life, and without luster: 'Tis all one. They fasten all morall Philosophy as well to a popular and private life, as to one of richer stuffe. Every man beareth the whole stampe of humane condition.

Authors communicate themselves unto the world by some speciall and strange marke; I the first, by my generall disposition; as Michael de Montaigne; not as a Grammarian, or a Poet, or a Lawyer. If the world complaine, I speake too much of my selfe, I complaine, it thinkes no more of it selfe. But is it reason, that being so private in use, I should pretend to make my selfe publike in knowledge? Or is it reason, I should produce into the world, where fashion and arte have such sway and command, the raw and simple effects of nature; and of a nature as yet exceeding weake? To write bookes without learning, is it not to make a wall without stone or such like thing? Conceits of musicke are directed by arte; mine by hap. Yet have I this according to learning, that never man handled subject, he understood or knew, better then I doe this I have undertaken; being therein the cunningest man alive.

Secondly, that never man waded further into his matter, nor more distinctly sifted the parts and dependances of it, nor arrived more exactly and fully to the end he proposed unto himselfe. To finish the same, I have neede of naught but faithfulnessse: which is therein as sincere and pure as may be found. I speake truth, not my

Montaigne
knows well his subject

Mon- belly-full, but as much as I dare: and I dare taigne the more, the more I grow into yeares: for it and his seemeth, custome alloweth old age more liberty
book to babbel, and indiscretion to talke of it selfe.
march It cannot herein be, as in trades: where the together Crafts-man and his worke doe often differ.
Being a man of so sound and honest conversation, writ he so foolishly? Are such learned writings come from a man of so weake a conversation? who hath but an ordinary conceit, and writeth excellently, one may say his capacitie is borrowed, not of himselfe. A skilfull man, is not skilfull in all things: But a sufficient man,
is sufficient every where, even unto ignorance.
Here my booke and my selfe march together,
and keepe one pace. Else-where one may commend or condemne the worke, without the worke-man; heere not: who toucheth one toucheth the other. He who shall judge of it without knowing him, shal wrong himself more then me, he that knows it, hath wholly satisfied mee. Happie beyond my merite, if I get this onely portion of publike approbation, as I may cause men of understanding to thinke, I had beene able to make use and benefit of learning, had I beene endowed with any: and deserved better helpe of memorie:
excuse wee here what I often say, that I seldome
repent my selfe, and that my conscience is contented with it selfe; not of an Angels or a horses conscience, but as of a mans conscience. Adding ever this clause, not of ceremonie, but of true and essentiall submission; that I speake inquiring and doubting, meerely and simply referring my selfe, from resolution, unto common and lawfull opinions. I teach not; I report: No vice is absolutely vice, which offendeth not, and a sound judgement accuseth not: For, the deformitie and incommoditie thereof is so palpable, as peradventure they have reason, who say, it is chiefly produced by sottishnesse and brought forth by ignorance; so hard is it, to imagine one should know it without hating it. Malice sucks up the greatest part of her owne venome, and therewith impoysoneth herselfe. Vice, leaveth, as an ulcer in the flesh, a repentance in the soule, which still scratcheth and bloodieth it selfe. For reason effaceth other griefes and sorrowes, but engendereth those of repentance: the more yrkesome, because inward: As the colde and heate of agues is more offensive then that which comes outward. I account vice (but each according to their measure) not onely those which reason disallowes, and nature condemnes, but such as mans opinion hath forged as false and erroneous, if lawes and custome authorize the same. In like manner there is no goodnesse but gladdeth an honest disposition. There is truely I wot not what kinde of congratulation, of well doing, which rejoyceth in our selves, and a generous jollitie, that accompanieth a good conscience. A minde couragiously vicious, may happily furnish it selfe with security, but shee cannot be fraught, with this selfe-[joying] delight and satisfaction. It is no smal pleasure, for one to feele himselfe preserved from the contagion of an age so infected as ours, and to say to himselfe; could a man enter and see even into my soule, yet shold vulgar peoples good opinion is injurious ’

‘ The

he not finde me guilty, either of the affliction or ruine of any body, nor culpable of envie or revenge, nor of publike offence against the lawes, nor tainted with innovation, trouble or sedition; nor spotted with falsifying of my word: and although the libertie of times allowed and taught it every man, yet could I never be induced to touch the goods or dive into the purse of any French man, and have alwayes lived upon mine own, as wel in time of war, as peace: nor did I ever make use of any poore mans labor, without reward. These testimonies of an unspotted conscience are very pleasing, which naturall joy is a great benefit unto us: and the onely payment never faileth us. To ground the recompence of vertuous actions upon the approbation of others, is to undertake a most uncertaine or troubled foundation, namely in an age so corrupt and times so ignorant, as this is: the vulgar peoples good opinion is injurious. Whom trust you in seeing what is commendable? God keepe me from being an honest man, according to the description I dayly see made of honour, each one by himselfe. Quæ fuerant vitia, mores sunt. What earst were vices are now growne fashions. Some of my friends, have sometimes attempted to schoole me roundly, and sift me plainly, either of their owne motion, or envited by me, as to an office, which to a well composed minde, both in profit and lovingnesse, exceedeth all the duties of sincere amity. Such have I ever entertained with open armes of curtesie, and kinde acknowledgement. But now to speake from my conscience I often found so much false measure in their reproaches and praises, that I had not greatly erred if I had rather erred, then done well after their fashion. Such as we especially, who live a private life not exposed to any gaze but our owne, ought in our hearts establish a touch-stone, and there to touch our deedes and try our actions; and accordingly, now cherish and now chastise our selves. I have my owne lawes and tribunall, to judge of mee, whither I addresse my selfe more then any where els. I restraîne my actions according to other but extend them according to my selfe. None but your self knows rightly whether you be demiss and cruel, or loyal and devout. Others see you not, but ghesse you by uncertaine conjectures. They see not so much your nature as your arte. Adhere not then to their opinion, but hold unto your owne. Tuo tibi iudicio est utendum. Virtutis et viciorum grave ipsius conscientiae pondus est : quæ sublata jacent omnia (Cic. Nat. Deor. iii.); You must use your owne judgement. The weight of the very conscience of vice and vertues is heavy : take that away, and all is downe. But whereas it is said, that repentance neerely followeth sin, seemeth not to imply sinne placed in his rich aray, which lodgeth in us as in his proper mansion. One may disavow and disclaime vices, that surprise us, and whereto our passions transport us : but those, which by long habite are rooted in a strong, and ankred in a powerfull will, are not subject to contradiction. Repentance is but a denying of our will, and an touchstone

The inner

The inward and the outward life opposition of our fantasies which diverts us here and there. It makes some disavow his former vertue and continencie.

Quæ mens est hodie, cur eadem non puero fuit, Vel cur his animis incolumes non redeunt genæ?

—HOR. Car. iv. Od. x. 7.

Why was not in a youth same minde as now?
Or why beares not this mind a youthfull brow?

That is an exquisite life, which even in his owne private keepeth it selfe in awe and order. Every one may play the jugler, and represent an honest man upon the stage; but within, and in bosome, where all things are lawfull, where all is concealed; to keepe a due rule or formall decorum, that's the point. The next degree, is to be so in ones owne home, and in his ordinary actions, whereof we are to give account to no body: wherein is no study, nor art. And therefore Bias describing the perfect state of a family, whereof (saith he) the maister, be such inwardly by himselfe, as he is outwardly, for feare of the lawes, and respect of mens speeches. And it was a worthy saying of Julius Drusus, to those worke-men, which for three thousand crownes, offered so to reforme his house, that his neighbours should no more over looke into it: I will give you sixe thousand (said he) and contrive it so, that on all sides every man may looke into it. The custome of Agesilaus is remembred with honour, who in his travaile was wont to take up his lodging in churches, that the people, and

Gods themselves might pry into his private actions. Some have beene admirable to the world, in whom nor his wife, nor his servants ever noted any thing remarkeable. Few men have beene admired of their familiars. No man hath beene a Prophet, not onely in his house, but in his owne country, saith the experience of histories. Even so in things of nought. And in this base example, is the image of greatnesse discerned. In my climate of Gascoigne they deeme it a jest to see mee in print. The further the knowledge which is taken of mee is from my home, of so much more woorth am I. In Guienne I pay Printers; in other places they pay mee. Upon this accident they ground, who living and present keepe close-lurking, to purchase credit when they shall be dead and absent. I had rather have lesse. And I cast not my selfe into the world, but for the portion I draw from it. That done, I quit it. The people attend on such a man with wonderment, from a publike act, unto his owne doores: together with his roabes hee leaves of his part; falling so much the lower, by how much higher hee was mounted. View him within, there all is turbulent, disordered and vile. And were order and formality found in him, a lively, impartiall and well sorted judgement is required, to perceive and fully to discern him in these base and private actions. Considering that order is but a dumpish and drowsie vertue: To gaine a Battaile, perfourme an Ambassage, and governe a people, are noble and woorthy actions; to chide,

No man
is a hero
to his valet

Socrates laugh, sell, pay, love, hate, and mildely and justly and Alex- to converse both with his owne and with himander selfe ; not to relent, and not gaine-say himselfe,
 are thinges more rare, more difficult and lesse remarkeable.

Retired lives sustaine that way, what ever some say, offices as much more crabbed, and extended, then other lives doe. And private men (saith Aristotle) serve vertue more hardly, and more highly attend her, then those which are magistrates or placed in authority. Wee prepare our selves unto eminent occasions, more for glory
 then for conscience. The nearest way to come unto glory, were to doe that for conscience, which wee doe for glory. And me seemeth the vertue of Alexander representeth much lesse vigor in her large Theater, then that of Socrates, in his base and obscure excercitation. I easily conceive Socrates, in the roome of Alexander ; Alexander in that of Socrates I cannot. If any aske the one, what hee can do, he will answere, Conquer
the world ; let the same question bee demanded of the other, he will say, leade my life con- formably to it's naturall condition ; A science much more generous, more important, and more lawfull.

The woorth of the minde consisteth not in going high, but in marching orderly. Her greatnesse is not excercised in greatnesse ; in mediocritye it is.
 As those, which judge and touch us inwardely,
 make no great accoumpt of the brightnesse of our publique actions : and see they are but streakes and poyntes of cleare Water, surging from a bottome, otherwise slimie and full of mud : So Personal

 those who judge us by this gay outward appar- attributes
 ance, conclude the same of our inward constitution, and cannot couple popular faculties as theirs
 are, unto these other faculties, which amaze them
 so farre from their leuell. So do we attribute savage shapes and ougly formes unto diuels. As who doeth not ascribe high-raised eye-browes, open nostrils, a sterne frightfull visage, and a huge-body unto Tamberlaine, as is the forme or shape of the imagination we have fore-conceived
 by the brute of his name ? Had any heretofore shewed me Erasmus, I could hardly had bin induced to think, but whatsoever he had said to his boy or hostes, had been Adages and Apo-thegmes. We imagine much more fitly an Artificer upon his close stoole or on his wife,
 then a great judge, reverend for his carriage and regardfull for his sufficiencie ; we think, that
 from those high thrones they should not abase themselves so low, as to live. As vitious mindes are often incited to do well by some strange impulsion, so are vertuous spirits mooved to do ill. They must then be judged by their settled estate, when they are neare themselves, and as we say, at home, if at any time they
 be so ; or when they are nearest unto rest,
 and in their naturall seate. Naturall inclinations are by institution helped and strengthned, but they neither change nor exceed. A thousand natures in my time, have a thwart a contrary discipline, escaped toward vertue or toward vice.

Montaigne's
involuntary use of Latin

*Sic ubi desuetæ silvis in carcere clausæ,
Mansuevere feræ, et vultus posuere minaces,
Atque hominem didicere pati, si torrida parvus
Venit in ora cruor, redeunt rabiesque furorque,
Admonitæque tument gustato sanguine fauces,
Fervet, et à trepido vix abstinet iræ magistro.*

—LUCAN. iv. 237.

So when wilde beasts, disused from the wood,
Fierce lookes laid-downe, grow tame, closde in a cage,
Taught to beare man, if then a little blood
Touch their hot lips, furie returnes and rage;
Their jawes by taste admonisht swell with vaines,
Rage boyles, and from faint keeper scarce abstaines.

These originall qualities are not grubd out, they are but covered, and hidden: The Latine tongue is to me in a manner naturall; I understand it better then French; but it is now fortie yeares, I have not made use of it to speake, nor much to write: yet in some extreame emotions and suddaine passions, wherein I have twice or thrice falne, since my years of discretion; and namely once, when my father being in perfect health, fell all along upon me in a swoone, I have ever, even from my very hart uttered my first words in latine: Nature rushing and by force expressing it selfe, against so long a custome; the like example is alleadged of divers others. Those which in my time, have attempted to correct the fashions of the world by new opinions, reforme the vices of apparance; those of essence they leave untouched if they encrease them not: And their encrease is much to be feared. We willingly protract al other well-doing upon these externall reformatiions, of lesse cost, and of greater merit;

whereby we satisfie good cheape, other naturall consubstantiall and intestine vices. Looke a little into the course of our experience. There is no man (if he listen to himselfe) that doth not discover in himselfe a peculiar forme of his, a swaying forme, which wrestleth against the institution, and against the tempests of passions, which are contrary unto him. As for me, I feele not my selfe much agitated by a shooke; I commonly finde my selfe in mine owne place, as are sluggish and lumpish bodies. If I am not close and neare unto my selfe, I am never farre-off: My debauches or excesses transport me not much. There is nothing extreame and strange: yet have I sound fits and vigorous lusts. The true condemnation, and which toucheth the common fashion of our men, is, that their very retreat is full of corruption and filth: The Idea of their amendment blurred and deformed; their repentance crazed and faultie very neere as much as their sinne. Some, either because they are so fast and naturally joyned unto vice, or through long custome, have lost all sense of its ugliness. To others (of whose ranke I am) vice is burthenous, but they counter-balance it with pleasure, or other occasions: and suffer it, and at a certaine rate lend themselves unto it, though basely and viciously. Yet might happily so remote a disproportion of measure bee imagined, where with justice, the pleasure might excuse the offence, as we say of profit. Not onely being accidentall, and out of sinne, as in thefts, but even in the very exercise of it, as in the acquaintance or struggle

The
in the heart

A thief by profession copulation with women ; where the provocation is so violent, and as they say, sometime unresistable. In a towne of a kinsman of mine, the other day, being in Armignac, I saw a country man, commonly sirnamed the Theefe : who himselfe reported his life to have beene thus. Being borne a begger, and perceiving, that to get his bread by the sweate of his browe and labour of his hands, would never sufficiently arme him against penury, he resolved to become a Theefe ; and that trade had employed all his youth safely, by meanes of his bodily strength : for he ever made up Harvest and Vintage in other mens grounds ; but so farre off, and in so great heapes, that it was beyond imagination, one man should in one night carry away so much upon his shoulders : and was so carefull to equall the pray, and disperse the mischiefe he did, that the spoile was of lesse import to every particular man.

Hee is now in old yeares indifferently rich ; for a man of his condition (Godamercy his trade) which he is not ashamed to confesse openly. And to reconcile himselfe with God, he affirmeth, to be dayly ready, with his gettings, and other good turnes, to satisfie the posterity of those hee hath heretofore wronged or robbed ; which if himselfe bee not of abilitie to performe (for hee cannot do all at once) hee will charge his heires withall, according to the knowledge he hath, of the wrongs by him done to every man. By this description, bee it true or false, he respecteth theft, as a dishonest and unlawfull action, and nateth the same : yet lesse then pinching want :

He repents but simply ; for in regard it was so counterballanced and recompenced, he repenteth not. That is not that habit which incorporates us unto vice, and confirmeth our understanding in it ; nor is it that boysterous winde, which by violent blastes dazeleth and troubleth our mindes, and at that time confoundes, and overwhelmes both us, our judgement, and all into the power of vice. What I doe, is ordinarily full and compleate, and I march (as wee say) all in one pace : I have not many motions, that hide themselves and slinke away from my reason, or which very neare are not guided by the consent of all my partes, without division, or intestine sedicion : my judgement hath the whole blame, or commendation ; and the blame it hath once, it hath ever : for, almost from it's birth, it hath beene one of the same inclination, course and force. And in matters of generall opinions, even from my infancy, I ranged my selfe to the point I was to hold. Some sinnes there are outrageous, violent and suddaine ; leave we them.

But those other sinnes, so often reassumed, determined and advised upon, whether they be of complexion, or of profession and calling, I cannot conceive how they should so long be settled in one same courage, unlesse the reason and conscience of the sinner were thereunto inwardly privie and constantly willing. And how to imagine or fashion the repentance therof, which he vanteth, doth some times visit him, seemeth somewhat hard unto me. I am not of Pythagoras Sect, that men take a new soule,

Mon-
taigne's
singleness of
judgment

The essence of repentance when to receive Oracles, they approach the images of Gods, unlesse he would say with all, that it must be a strange one, new, and lent him for the time : our owne, giving so little signe of purification, and cleannesse worthie of that office. They doe altogether against the Stoycall precepts, which appoint us to correct the imperfections and vices we finde in our selves, but withall forbid us to disturbe the quiet of our minde. They make us beleewe, they feele great remorse, and are inwardly much displeased with sinne ; but of amendment, correction or intermission, they shew us none. Surely there can be no perfect health ; Where the disease is not perfectly remooved. Were repentance put in the scale of the ballance, it would weigh downe sinne. I finde no humour so easie to be counterfeited as Devotion : If one conforme not his life and conditions to it, her essence is abstruse and concealed, her apparence gentle and stately.

For my part, I may in generall wish to be other then I am ; I may condemne and mislike my universall forme ; I may beseech God to grant me an undefiled reformation, and excuse my naturall weakenesse ; but meeseemeth I ought not to tearme this repentance no more then the displeasure of being neither Angell nor Cato. My actions are squared to what I am and [conformed] to my condition. I cannot doe better : And repentance doth not properly concerne what is not in our power ; sorrow doth. I may imagine infinite dispositions of a higher pitch, and better governed then myne, yet doe I nothing better my faculties ; no more then mine arme becometh stronger, or my wit more excellent, by conceiving some others to be so. If to suppose and wish a more nobler working then ours, might produce the repentance of our owne, wee should then repent us of our most innocent actions : for so much as we judge that in a more excellent nature, they had beene directed with greater perfection and dignity ; and our selves would doe the like. When I consult with my age of my youthes proceedings, I finde that commonly, (according to my opinion) I managed them in order. This is all my resistance is able to performe. I flatter not my selfe : in like circumstances, I should ever be the same. It is not a spot, but a whole dye that staynes mee. I acknowledge no repentance, [that] is superficiall, meane and ceremonious. It must touch me on all sides, before I can terme it repentance. It must pinch my entrailes, and afflict them as deeply and throughly, as God himselfe be-holds mee. When in negotiating, many good fortunes have slipt me for want of good discretion, yet did my projects make good choyce, according to the occurrences presented unto them. Their manner is ever to take the easier and surer side. I finde that in my former deliberations, I proceeded, after my rules, discreetely for the subjects state propounded to mee ; and in like occasions, would proceede alike a hundred yeares hence. I respect not what now it is, but what it was, when I consulted of it. The consequence of all designes consists in the seasons ;

Not a spot but a whole dye stains
me

Seekers after advice occasions passe, and matters change uncessantly. I have in my time runne into some grosse, absurde and important errors; not for want of good advise, but of good happe. There are secret and indivinable parts in the objects men doe handle; especially in the nature of men and mute conditions, without shew, and sometimes unknowne of the very possessors, produced and stirred up by suddaine occasions. If my wit could neyther finde nor presage them, I am not offended with it; the function thereof is contained within it's owne limits. If the successe [beate] me, and favour the side I refused; there is no remedy; I fall not out with my selfe: I accuse my fortune, not my endeavour: that's not called repentance. Phocion had given the Athenians some counsell, which was not followed: the matter, against his opinion, succeeding happily: How now Phocion, (quoth one) art thou pleased the matter hath thrived so well? yea (said hee) and I am glad of it, yet repent not the advise I gave.

When any of my friends come to me for counsell, I bestow it francklie and clearelie, not (as well-nigh all the world doth,) wavering at the hazard of the matter, whereby the contrary of my meaning may happen: that so they may justly finde fault with my advise: for which I care not greatly. For they shall doe me wrong, and it became not mee to refuse them that dutie. I have no body to blame for my faults or misfortunes, but my self. For in effect I seldome use the advise of other unlesse it be for complement sake, and where I have need of instruction or knowledge of the fact. Marry in things wherein nought but judgement is to be employed; strange reasons may serve to sustaine, but not to divert me. I lend a favourable and courteous eare unto them all. But (to my remembrance) I never beleevved any but mine owne. With me they are but Flyes and Moathes, which distract my will. I little regard mine owne opinions, other mens I esteeme as little: Fortune payes mee accordingly. If I take no counsell I give as little. I am not much sought after for it, and lesse credited when I give it: Neither know I any enterprise, either private or publike, that my advise hath directed and brought to conclusion. Even those whom fortune had some-way tyde thereunto, have more willingly admitted the direction of others conceits, then mine. As one that am as jealous of the rights of my quiet, as of those of my authority; I would rather have it thus.

Indifference to counsel

Where leaving me, they jumpe with my profession, which is, wholly to settle and containe me in my selfe. It is a pleasure unto mee, to bee disinterested of other mens affayres, and disingaged from their contentions. When suites or businesses bee over-past, how-so-ever it bee, I greeve little at them. For, the imagination that they must necessarily happen so, puts mee out of paine; Behould them in the course of the Universe, and enchained in Stoycall causes. Your fantazie cannot by wish or imagination, remoove one point of them, but the whole order

Judgment
should be independent of age

of things must reverse both what is past, and what is to come. Moreover, I hate that accidentall repentance which olde age brings with it.

Hee that in ancient times said, he was beholden to yeares, because they had ridde him of voluptuousnesse, was not of mine opinion. I shall never give impuissance thankses, for any good it can do me. Nec tam aversa unquam videbitur ab opere suo providentia, ut debilitas inter optima inventa sit. Nor shall fore sight ever bee seene so averse from hir owne worke, that weakenesse bee found to bee one of the best things. Our appetites are rare in olde-age: the blowe overpassed, a deepe satiety seazeth upon us: Therein I see no conscience. Fretting care and weakenesse, imprint in us an effeminate and drowzie vertue.

Wee must not suffer our selves so fully to bee carried into naturall alterations, as to corrupt or adulterate our judgement by them. Youth and pleasure have not heretofore prevailed so much over me, but I could ever (even in the midst of sensualities) discern the ugly face of sinne: nor can the distaste which yeares bring on me, at this instant, keepe mee from discerning that of voluptuousnesse in vice. Now I am no longer in it, I judge of it as if I were still there. I who lively and attentively examine my reason, finde it to be the same that possessed me in my most dissolute and licentious age; unlesse perhaps, they being enfeebled and empayred by yeares, doe make some difference: And finde, that what delight it refuseth to affoorde mee

in regarde of my bodilie health, it would no more denie mee, then in times past, for the health of my soule. To see it out of combate, I holde it not the more couragious. My temptations are so mortified and crazed, as they are not worthy of it's oppositions; holding but my hand before me, I be-calme them. Should one present that former concupiscence unto it, I feare it would be of lesse power to sustaine it than heretofore it hath beene. I see in it, by it selfe no increase of judgement, nor accesse of brightnesse, what it now judgeth, it did then. Wherefore if there be any amendment, 'tis but diseased. Oh miserable kinde of remedie, to bee beholden unto sicknesse for our health. It is not for our mishap, but for the good successe of our judgement to performe this office. Crosses and afflictions, make me doe nothing but curse them. They are for people, that cannot bee awaked but by the whip: the course of my reason is the nimbler in prosperity; It is much more distracted and busied in the digesting of mischiefes, than of delights. I see much clearer in faire weather. Health forewarneth me, as with more pleasure, so to better purpose than sicknesse. I approached the nearest I could unto amendment and regularity, when I should have enjoyed the same; I should be ashamed and vexed, that the misery and mishap of my old age could exceede the health, attention and vigor of my youth: and that I should be esteemed, not for what I have beene, but for what I am leaft to be. The happy life (in my opinion) not (as said

Education by prosperity
and adversity

Mon-
taigne's
past life

Antisthenes) the happy death, is it that makes mans happinesse in this world.

I have not preposterously busied my selfe to tie the taile of a Philosopher, unto the head and bodie of a varlet: nor that this paultrie end, should disavow and belie the fairest, soundest, and longest part of my life. I will present my selfe, and make a generall muster of my whole, every where uniformly. Were I to live againe, it should be as I have already lived. I neither deplore what is past, nor dread what is to come: and if I be not deceived, the inward parts have neerely resembled the outward. It is one of the chieftest points wherein I am beholden to fortune, that in the course of my bodies estate, each thing hath beene carried in season. I have seene the leaves, the blossomes, and the fruit; and now see the drooping and withering of it. Happily, because naturally. I beare my present miseries the more gently, because they are in season, and with greater favour make me remember the long happinesse of my former life. In like manner, my discretion may well bee of like proportion in the one and the other time: but sure it was of much more performance, and had a better grace, being fresh, jolly and full of spirit, then now that it is worne, decrepite and toylesome.

I therefore renounce these casuall and dolourous reformatiōs. God must touch our heartes; our conscience must amende of it selfe, and not by reinforcement of our reason, nor by the enfeebling of our appetites. Voluptuousnesse in it selfe is neither pale nor discoloured, to bee discerned by bleare and troubled eyes. Wee should affect temperance and chastity for it selfe, and for Gods cause, who hath ordained them unto us : that which Catars bestow upon us, and which I am beholden to my chollicke [for, is] neither temperance nor chastitie. A man cannot boast of contemning or combating sensuality, if hee see her not, or know not her grace, her force and most attractive beauties. I know them both, and therefore may speake it. But mee thinks our soules in age are subject unto more importunate diseases and imperfections, then they are in youth. I said so being young, when my beardsse chinne was upbraided me ; and I say it againe, now that my gray beard gives me authority. We entitle wisdom, the frowardnesse of our humours, and the distaste of present things ; but in truth wee abandon not vices, so much as we change them ; and in mine opinion for the worse. Besides a sillie and ruinous pride, combersome tattle, wayward and unsotiable humours, superstition and a ridiculous carking for wealth, when the use of it is well-nigh lost, I finde the more envie, injustice and leaudnesse in it. It sets more wrinckles in our mindes, then on our foreheads : nor are there any spirits, or very rare ones, which in growing old taste not sowrely and mustily. Man marcheth entirely towards his increase and decrease. View but the wisdom of Socrates, and divers circumstances of his condemnation, I dare say he something lent himselfe unto it by prevarication of purpose : being so neere, and at the age of seventy, to endure the benumbing of

The soul
in age
and youth

A versatile mind

his spirits richest pace, and the dimming of his accustomed brightness. What Metamorphoses have I seene it daily make in divers of mine acquaintances? It is a powerfull maladie, which naturally and imperceptibly glideth into us: There is required great provision of study, heed and precaution, to avoid the imperfections wherewith it chargeth us; or at least to weaken their further progresse. I finde that notwithstanding all my entrenchings, by little and little it getteth ground upon me: I hold out as long as I can, but know not whither at length it will bring me. Happe what happe will, I am pleased the world know from what height I tumbled.

CHAP. III

Of three commerces or societies

WE must not cleave so fast unto our humours and dispositions. Our chieftest sufficiency is, to apply our selves to divers fashions. It is a being, but not a life, to bee tied and bound by necessity to one onely course. The goodliest mindes are those that have most variety and pliability in them. Behold an honourable testimony of old Cato: Huic versatile ingenium sic pariter ad omnia fuit, ut natum ad id unum diceret, quodcunque ageret (LIV. Bel. Mac. ix.). He had a wit so turneable for all things alike, as one would say hee had beene onely borne for that hee went about to do. Were I to dresse my selfe after mine owne manner, there is no fashion so good, whereto I would be so affected or tied, as not to know how to leave and loose it. Life is a motion unequall, irregular and multiforme. It is not to bee the friend (lesse the master) but the slave of ones selfe to follow uncessantly, and bee so addicted to his inclinations, as hee cannot stray from them, nor wrest them. This I say now, as being extreamly pestred with the importunity of my minde, forsomuch as shee cannot amuse her selfe, but whereon it is busied; nor employ it selfe, but bent and whole. How light soever the subject is one gives it, it willingly amplifieth, and wire-drawes the same, even unto the highest pitch of toile. It's idlenesse is therefore a painefull trade unto mee, and offensive to my health. Most wits have neede of extravagant stufte, to un-benumme and exercise themselves: mine hath neede of it, rather to settle and continue it selfe: Vitia otii negotio discutienda sunt (SEN. Ep. lvi.), The vices of idlenesse should bee shaken off with businesse: For, the most laborious care and principall studie of it, is, to studie it selfe. Bookes are one of those businesses that seduce it from studie. At the first thoughts that present themselves, it rouseth up and makes prooffe of all the vigour it hath. It exerciseth it's function sometimes toward force, sometimes towards order and comelinesse, it rangeth, moderates and fortifieth. It hath of it selfe to awaken the faculties of it: Nature having given it, as unto

Importu-
 nity of Mon-
 taigne's
 mind

The life of meditation all other, matter of it's owne for advantage, subjects fit enough whereon to devise and determine. Meditation is a large and powerfull study to such as vigorously can taste and employ themselves therein. I had rather forge then furnish my minde.

There is no office or occupation either weaker or stronger, then that of entertaining of ones thoughts according to the mind, whatsoever it be. The greatest make it their vacation, Quibus vivere est cogitare, to whom it is all one to live and to meditate. Nature hath also favoured it with this priviledge, that there is nothing we can do so long: nor action, whereto we give our selves more ordinarily and easily. It is the worke of Gods (saith Aristotle) whence both their happinesse and ours proceedeth. Reading serves mee especially, to awake my conceit by divers objects: to busie my judgement, not my memory. Few entertainements then, stay mee without vigour and force. T'is true that courtesie and beautie possesse mee, as much or more, then waight and depth. And because I slumber in all other communications, and lend but the superficiall parts of my attention unto them, it often befalleth mee, in such kinde of weake and absurd discourses, (discourses of countenance) to blurt out and answer ridiculous toies, and fond absurdities, unworthy a childe; or wilfully to hold my peace; therewithall more foolishly and incivilly. I have a kind of raving fancie-full behaviour, that retireth mee into my selfe; and on the other side, a grosse and childish ignorance of many ordinary things; by meanes of which 'As one two qualities, I have in my daies committed five may'

 or six as sottish trickes, as any one whosoever;
 which to my derogation may bee reported. But to follow my purpose, this harsh complexion of mine makes me nice in conversing with men (whom I must picke and cull out for the nonce)
 and unfit for common actions. Wee live and negotiate with the people: If their behaviour
 importune us, if wee disdaine to lend our selves
 to base and vulgar spirits, which often are as regular as those of a finer mould; and all wise-
dome is unsavourie, that is not conformed to common insipience. Wee are no longer to intermeddle either with our, or other mens affaires: and both publicke and private forsake such kinde of people.

The least wrested, and most naturall proceedings of our minde, are the fairest; the best occupations, those which are least forced. Good God, how good an office doth wisdom unto those, whose desires she squareth according to their power! There is no science more profitable. As one may, was the burden and favoured saying of Socrates: A sentence of great substance. Wee must addresse and stay our desires, to things most easie and neerest. Is it not a fond-peevish humour in mee, to disagree from a thousand; to whom my fortune joineth mee, without whom I cannot live, to adhere unto one or two, that are out of my commerce and [conversation]; or rather to a fantasticall conceit, or fancie-full desire, for a thing I cannot obtaine?
 My soft behaviours and milde manners, enemies

Montaigne's
friendships to all sharpenesse and foes to all bitterness, may easily have discharged mee from envie and contention. To bee beloved, I say not, but not to be hated, never did man give more occasion. But the coldnesse of my conversation, hath with reason robd mee of the good will of many; which may bee excused, if they interpret the same to other, or worse sense. I am most capable of getting rare amities, and continuing exquisite acquaintances. For so [much] as with so greedie hunger I snatch at such acquaintances as answer my taste and square with my humour. I so greedily produce and headlong cast my selfe upon them, that I do not easily misse to cleave unto them, and where I light on, to make a steady impression; I have often made happie and successefull triall of it.

In vulgar worldly friendships, I am somewhat cold and barren: for my proceeding is not naturall, if not unresisted and with hoised-full sailes. Moreover, my fortune having enured and allured mee, even from my infancie, to one sole singular and perfect amitie, hath verily, in some sort, distasted mee from others: and over deeply imprinted in my fantasie, that it is a beast sociable and for companie, and not of troupe, as said an ancient writer. So that it is naturally a paine unto mee, to communicate my selfe by halves, and with modification: and that servile or suspicious wisdom, which in the conversation of these numerous and imperfect amities, is ordained and proposed unto us: Prescribed in these dayes especially, Wherein one cannot speake of the world but dangerously or falsely. Yet I see, that who (as I do) makes for his ende, the commodities of his life (I meane essentiall commodities) must avoide as a plague, these difficulties and quaintnesse of humour. Familiarity towards

inferiours

I should commend a high-raysed minde, that could both bende and discharge it selfe: that where-ever hir fortune might transport hir, shee might continue constant: that could discourse with hir neighbours of all matters, as of hir building, of hir hunting and of any quarrell; and entertaine with delight a Carpenter or a Gardiner. I envie those which can be familiar with the meanest of their followers, and vouchsafe to contract friendship, and frame discourse with their owne servants. Nor do I like the advise of Plato, ever to speake imperiously unto our attendants, without blithnesse and sance any familiarity: be it to men or women servants. For, besides my reason, it is inhumanity, and injustice, to attribute so much unto that prerogative of fortune: and the government, where lesse inequality is permitted betweene the servant and master, is, in my conceite the more indifferent. Some other study to rouse and raise their minde; but I to abase and prostrate mine: it is not faulty but in extension.

*Narras et genus Æaci,
Et pugnata sacro bella sub Ilio.
Quo Chium pretio cadum
Mercesur, quis aquam temperet ignibus,
Quo præbente domum, et quota
Pclignis caream frigoribus, taces.*

—HOR. Car. iii. Od. xix. 3.

Need of the curb

You tell of Æacus the pedegree;
 The warres at sacred Troye you do display,
 You tell not at what price a hogs-head we May buy of the best Wine; who shall allaye
 Wine-fire with water, at whose house to holde,
 At what a-clock, I may be kept from colde.

Even as the Lacedemonian valour had neede of moderation, and of sweet and pleasing sounds of Flutes, to flatter and allay it in time of warre, least it should runne head-long into rashnesse and fury: whereas all other nations use commonly pearcing sounds and strong shouts, which violently excite, and enflame their souldiers courage: so thinke I (against ordinary custome) that in the imployment of our spirit, wee have for the most part more need of leade then wings; of coldnesse and quiet, then of heate and agitation. Above all, in my mind, The onely way to playe the foole well, is to seeme wise among fooles: to speake as though ones tongue were ever bent to Favelar' in punta diforchetta (Ital. Prov.), To syllabize or speake misingly. One must lend himselfe unto those hee is with, and sometimes affect ignorance: Set force and subtiltie aside; In common employments 'tis enough to reserve order; dragge your selfe even close to the ground, [if] they will have it so. The learned stumble willingly on this blocke: making continuall muster, and open show of their skill, and dispersing their bookes abroad: And have in these dayes so filled the closets, and possessed the eares of Ladyes, that if they retaine not their substance, at least they have their countenance: using in all sorts of discourse and subject how base or popular soever, a newe, an affected and learned fashion of speaking and writing. 'Precious' learning

*Hoc sermone parent, hoc iram, gaudia, curas,
Hoc cuncta effundunt animi secreta, quid ultra?
Concumbunt docte.*—JUVEN. Sat. vi. 189.

They in this language feare, in this they fashion
Their joyes, their cares, their rage, their inward passion;
What more? they learned are in copulation.

And alledge Plato, and Saint Thomas for things, which the first man they meete would decide as well, and stand for as good a witnesse. Such learning as could not enter into their minde, hath staid on their tongues. If the well-borne will give any credit unto me, they shall be pleased to make their own and naturall riches to prevaile and be of worth: They hide and shroud their formes under forraigne and borrowed beauties: It is great simplicity, for any body to smother and conceale his owne brightnesse, to shine with a borrowed light: They are buried and entombed under the Arte of CAPSULA TOTÆ, It is because they do not sufficiently know themselves: the world contains nothing of more beauty: It is for them to honour Artes, and to beautifie embellishment. What neede they more then to live beloved and honoured? They have, and know but too much in that matter. There needes but a little rousing and enflaming of the faculties that are in them.

Studies
for Ladies

When I see them meddling with Rhetoricke, with Law, and with Logicke, and such like trash, so vaine and unprofitable for their use: I enter into feare, that those who advise them to such things, doe it, that they may have more law to governe them under that pretence. For, what other excuse can I devise for them? It is sufficient, that without us, they may frame, or roule the grace of their eyes, unto cheerefulnesse, unto severity, and unto mildnesse: and season a No with frowardnesse, with doubt and with favour; and require not an interpreter in discourses made for their service. With this learning they command without controule, and over-rule both Regents and Schooles. Yet if it offend them to yeeld us any preheminance and would for curiosity sake have part in bookes also: Poesie is a study fit for their purpose: being a wanton, ammusing, subtill, disguised, and pratling Arte; all in delight, all in shew, like to themselves. They may also select divers commodities out of History. In Morall Philosophy, they may take the discourses which enable them to judge of our humours, to censure our conditions, and to avoide our guiles and treacheries; to temper the rashnesse of their owne desires, to husband their liberty: lengthen the delights of life, gently to beare the inconstancy of a servant, the peevishnesse or rudenesse of a husband, the importunity of yeares, the unwelcomnesse of wrinkles, and such like minde-troubling accidents. Loe here the most and greatest share of learning I would assigne them,

There are some particular, retired and close dispositions.

My essentiall forme is fit for communication, and proper for production : I am all outward and in apparance ; borne for society and unto friendship. The solitude I love and commend, is especially but to retire my affections and redeeme my thoughts unto my selfe : to restraîne and close up, not my steppes, but my desires and my cares, resigning all forraigne solicitude and trouble, and mortally shunning all manner of servitude and obligation ; and not so much the throng of men as the importunity of affaires. Locall solitarinesse (to say trueth) doth rather extend and enlarge me outwardly ; I give my selfe to State-businesse, and to the world, more willingly when I am all alone. At the court, and in presse of people, I close and slinke into mine owne skinne. Assemblies thrust mee againe into my selfe. And I never entertaine my selfe so fondly, so licentiously, and so particularly, as in places of respect, and ceremonious discretion. Our follies make mee not laugh, but our wisdomes doe. Of mine owne complexion, I am no enemy to the agitations and stirrings of our Courts : I have there past great part of my life : and am inured to bee merry in great assemblies ; so it be by intermission, and sutable to my humour.

But this tendernesse and coinesse of judgement (whereof I speake) doth perforce tie me unto solitarinesse. Yea even in mine owne house, in the midst of a numerous family and most frequented houses, I see people more then a good

The solitude
Montaine
loved

The society Montaigne sought many, but seldome such as I love to converse or communicate withall. And there I reserve, both for my selfe, and others, an unaccustomed liberty; making truce with ceremonies, assistance, and invitings, and such other troublesome ordinances of our courtesies (O servile custome and importunate manner) there every man demeaneth himselfe as hee pleaseth, and entertaineth what his thoughts affect: whereas I keepe my selfe silent, meditating and close, without offence to my guests or friends.

The men whose familiarity and society I hunt after, are those which are called honest, vertuous and sufficient: the image of whom doth distaste and divert mee from others. It is (being rightly taken) the rarest of our formes; and a forme or fashion chiefly due unto nature.

The end or scope of this commerce, is principally and simply familiarity, conference and frequentation: the exercise of mindes, without other fruite. In our discourses, all subjects are alike to me: I care not though they want either waight or depth; grace and pertinency are never wanting; all therein is tainted with a ripe and constant judgement, and commixt with goodnesse, liberty, cheerefulnesse, and kindnesse. It is not onely in the subject of Laws and affaires of Princes, that our spirit sheweth it's beautie, grace and vigor: It sheweth them as much in private conferences. I know my people by their very silence and smyling, and peradventure discover them better at a Table, then sitting in serious counsell.

Hippomachus said, hee discerned good Wrestlers but by seeing them march through a Street. If learning vouchsafe to step into our talke, shee shall not be refused; yet must not shee be sterne, mastring, imperious and importunate, as commonly shee is; but assistant, and docile of hir selfe. Therein wee seeke for nothing but recreation and pastime: when we shall looke to be instructed, taught and resolved, we will go seeke and sue to hir in hir Throne. Let hir if she please keepe from us at that time; for, as commodious and pleasing as shee is: I presume that for a neede we could spare hir presence, and doe our businesse well-enough without hir. Wits well borne, soundly bred and exercised in the practise and commerce of men, become gracious and plausible of themselves. Arte is but the Checke-roule, and Register of the Productions uttered, and conceites produced by them.

of men
and of women

The company of faire, and society of honest women is likewise a sweet commerce for me: Nam nos quoque oculos eruditos habemus (CIC. Parad.), for we also have learned eyes. If the minde have not so much to solace hir-selfe, as in the former; the corporall sences, whose part is more in the second, bring it to a proportion neere unto the other; although in mine opinion not equall. But it is a society wherein it behooveth a man somewhat to stand upon his guard: and especially those that are of a strong constitution, and whose body can do much, as in me. In my youth I heated my selfe therein and was very violent: and indured all the rages and

Feigned furious assaults, which Poets say happen to those love who without order or discretion abandon themselves over-loosly and riotously unto it. True it is indeed, that the same lash hath since stood me instead of an instruction.

Quicumque Argolico de classe Capharea fugit, Semper ab Euboicis vela retorquet aquis.

—OVID. Trist. i. El. i. 83.

Greeke Sailers that Capharean Rockes did fly,
 From the Eubæan Seas their sailes still ply.

It is folly to fasten all ones thoughts upon it, and with a furious and indiscreet affection to engage himselfe unto it: But on the otherside, to meddle with it without love or bond of affection, as Comedians do, to play a common part of age and manners, without ought of their owne but bare-conned words, is verily a provision for ones safety: and yet but a cowardly one; as is that of him, who would forgoe his honour, his profit or his pleasure for feare of danger; for it is certaine that the practisers of such courses, cannot hope for any fruite able to moove or satisfie a worthy minde.

One must very earnestly have desired that, whereof he would enjoy an absolute delight: I meane, though fortune should unjustly favour their intention: which often hapneth, because there is no woman, how deformed and unhand-some soever, but thinkes hir-selfe lovely, amiable and praiseworthy, either for hir age, hir haire or gate (for there are generally no more faire then foule ones). And the Brachmanian maides wanting other commendations; by Proclamation for that purpose, made shew of their matrimoniall parts unto the people assembled, to see if thereby at least they might get them husbands. By consequence there is not one of them, but upon the first oath one maketh to serve her, will very easily be perswaded to thinke well of her selfe. Now this common treason and ordinary protestations of men in these dayes, must needes produce the effects, experience already discovereth: which is, that either they joyne together, and cast away themselves on themselves, to avoid us, or on their side follow also the example wee give them; acting their part of the play, without passion; without care, and without love lending themselves to this entercourse: Neque affectui suo aut alieno obnoxia: Neither liable to their own nor other folkes affection. Thinking, according to Lysias perswasions in Plato, they may so much the more profitably and commodiously yeeld unto us; by how much lesse we love them: Wherein it will happen as in Comedies, the spectators shall have as much or more pleasure, as the Comedians. For my part, I no more acknowledge Venus without Cupid, then a mother-hood without an off-spring: They are things which enterlend and enter-owe one another their essence. Thus doth this cozening rebound on him that useth it; and as it cost him little, so gets he not much by it. Those which made Venus a goddess, have respected that her principall beautie was incorporeall and spirituall. But shee whom these

Love's
reciprocity

Amours
of Montaigne's
youth

kinde of people hunt after, is not so much as humane, nor also brutall; but such as wilde beasts, would not have her so filthy and terrestriall. We see that imagination enflames them, and desire or lust urgeth them, before the body: We see in one and other sex, even in whole heards, choise and distinctions in their affections, and amongst themselves acquaintances of long continued good-will and liking. And even those to whom age denieth bodily strength, doe yet bray, neigh, roare, skip and wince for love. Before the deed we see them full of hope and heat; and when the body hath plaid his part, even tickle and tingle themselves with the sweetnesse of that remembrance: some of them swell with pride at parting from it, others all weary and glutted, ring out songs of glee and triumph. Who makes no more of it but to discharge his body of some naturall necessitie, hath no cause to trouble others with so curious preparation. It is no food for a greedy and clownish hunger. As one that would not be accounted better then I am, thus much I will display of my youths wanton-errors: Not onely for the danger of ones health that followes that game (yet could I not avoid two, though light and cursorie assaults) but also for contempt, I have not much beene given to mercenarie and common acquaintances. I have coveted to set an edge on that sensuall pleasure by difficultie, by desire, and for some glory. And liked Tiberius his fashions, who in his amours was swaied as much by modesty and noblenesse, as by any other quality. And Floras humour, who would prostitute her selfe to none worse then Dictators, Consuls, or Censors, and tooke delight in the dignitie and greatnesse of her lovers, doth some-what sute with mine. Surely glittering pearles and silken cloathes adde some-thing unto it, and so doe titles, nobilitie and a worthie traine. Besides which, I made high esteeme of the minde, yet so as the body might not justly be found fault withall: For, to speake my conscience, if either of the two beauties were necessarily to be wanting, I would rather have chosen to want the mentall, whose use is to be employed in better things. But in the subject of love; a subject that chiefly hath reference unto the two senses of seeing and touching, some thing may be done without the graces of the minde, but little or nothing without the corporall. Beautie is the true availefull advantage of women: It is so peculiarly theirs, that ours though it require some features and different allurements, is not in her right kue, or true bias, unlesse confused with theirs; childish and beardlesse. It is reported, that such as serve the great Turke under the title of beautie (whereof the number is infinite) are dismissed at furthest when they once come to the age of two and twenty yeeres. Discourse, discretion, together with the offices of true amitie, are better found amongst men: and therefore governe they the worlds affaires. These two commerces or societies are accidentall, and depending of others; the one is troublesome and tedious for it's raritie; the other withers with the advantage

Beauty is
of women

Solace of books old age : nor could they have sufficiently provided for my lives necessities. That of bookes, which is the third, is much more solid-sure and much more ours ; some other advantages it yeeldeth to the two former : but hath for her share constancie and the facilitate of her service. This accosteth and secondeth all my course, and every where assisteth me : It comforts me in age, and solaceth me in solitarinesse : It easeth mee of the burthen of a weary-some sloth : and at all times rids me of tedious companies : it abateth the edge of fretting sorrow, on condition it be not extreme and over insolent. To divert me from any importunate imagination or insinuating conceit, there is no better way then to have recourse unto bookes : with ease they allure mee to them, and with facility they remoove them all. And though they perceive I neither frequent nor seeke them, but wanting other more essentiall, lively, and more naturall commodities, they never mutinie or murmur at mee ; but still entertaine mee with one and selfe-same visage. He may well walke a foote, that leades his horse by the bridle, saith the proverbe. And our James king of Naples and Sicilie, who being faire, young, healthy and in good plight, caused himselfe to be caried abroad in a plaine wagon or skreene, lying upon an homely pillow of course feathers, cloathed in a sute of home spunne gray, and a bonet of the same, yet royally attended on by a gallant troupe of Nobles, of Litters, Coches, and of all sorts of choice led-horses, a number of gentlemen, and officers, represented a tender and wavering austerity. The sicke man is not to be moaned, that bath his health in his sleeve. In the experience and use of this sentence, which is most true, consisteth all the commoditie I reape of bookes. In effect I make no other use of them, then those who know them not. I enjoy them, as a miser doth his gold; to know, that I may enjoy them when I list; my minde is setled and satisfied with the right of possession. I never travel without bookes, nor in peace nor in warre; yet doe I passe many dayes and moneths without using them. It shall be anon, say I or to morrow, or when I please; in the meane while the time runnes away, and passeth without hurting me. For it is wonderfull, what repose I take, and how I continue in this consideration, that they are at my elbow to delight me when time shall serve; and in acknowledging what assistance they give unto my life. This is the best munition I have found in this humane peregrination, and I extremely bewaile those men of understanding that want the same. I accept with better will all other kindes of amusements, how slight soever, forsomuch as this cannot faile me. At home I betake me somewhat the oftner to my library, whence all at once I command and survey all my houshold; It is seated in the chiefe entrie of my house, thence I behold under me my garden, my base court, my yard, and looke even into most roomes of my house. There without order, without method, and by peece-meales I turne over and ransacke, now one booke and

Mon-
taine
and his books

Montaigne's library now another. Sometimes I muse and rave ; and walking up and downe I endight and enregister these my humours, these my conceits. It is placed on the third storie of a tower. The lowermost is my Chapell ; the second a chamber with other lodgings, where I often lie, because I would be alone. Above it is a great ward-robe. It was in times past the most unprofitable place of all my house. There I [passe] the greatest part of my lives dayes, and weare out most houres of the day. I am never there a nights : Next unto it is a handsome neat cabinet, able and large enough to receive fire in winter, and very pleasantly windowen. And if I feared not care, more then cost ; (care which drives and diverts me from all businesse) I might easily joyne a convenient gallerie of a hundred paces long, and twelve broad, on each side of it, and upon one floore ; having already, for some other purpose, found all the walles raised unto a convenient height. Each retired place requireth a walke. My thoughts are prone to sleepe, if I sit long. My minde goes not alone as if [legges] did moove it. Those that studie without bookes, are all in the same case. The forme of it is round, and hath no flat side, but what serveth for my table and chaire : In which bending or circling manner, at one looke it offreth me the full sight of all my books, set round about upon shelves or desks, five rancks one upon another. It hath three bay-windowes, of a farre-extending, rich and unresisted prospect, and is in diameter sixteene paces void. In winter I am lesse continually there : for my house (as the name of it importeth) is pearched upon an over-pearing hillocke ; and hath no part more subject to all wethers then this : which pleaseth me the more, both because the accesse unto it is somewhat troublesome and remote, and for the benefit of the exercise which is to be respected ; and that I may the better seclude my selfe from companie, and keepe incrochers from me : There is my seat, that is my throne. I endeavour to make my rule therein absolute, and to sequester that only corner from the communitie of wife, of children and of acquaintaince. Else-where I have but a verball authoritie, of confused essence. Miserable, in my minde is he, who in his owne home, hath no where to be to himselfe ; where hee may particularly court, and at his pleasure hide or with-draw himself. Ambition paieth her followers well, to keepe them still in open view, as a statue in some conspicuous place. Magna servitus est magna fortuna (SEN. Cons. ad Pol. c. xxvi. p.): A great fortune is a great bondage. They cannot bee private so much as at their privie. I have deemed nothing so rude in the austerity of the life, which our Churchmen affect, as that in some of their companies they institute a perpetuall societie of place, and a numerous assistance amongst them in any thing they doe. And deeme it somewhat more tolerable to be ever alone, then never able to be so. If any say to me, It is a kinde of vilifying the Muses, to use them onely for sport and recreation, he wots not as I doe, what worth, an inner sanctuary

No roses
without
thorns

✓ pleasure, sport and passe-time is of: I had well nigh termed all other ends ridiculous. I live from hand to mouth, and with reverence be it spoken, I live but to my selfe: there end all my designes. Being young I studied for ostentation; then a little to enable my selfe and become wiser; now for delight and recreation, never for gaine. A vaine conceit and lavish humour I had after this kinde of stuffe; not only to provide for my need, but somewhat further to adorne and embellish my selfe withall: I have since partlie left it. Bookes have and containe divers pleasing qualities to those that can duly choose them. But no good without paines; no Roses without prickles. It is a pleasure not absolutely pure and neate, no more then all others; it hath his inconveniences attending on it and somtimes waighty ones: The minde is therein exercised, but the body (the care whereof I have not yet forgotten) remaineth there-whilst without action, and is wasted, and ensorrowed. I know no excesse more hurtfull for me, nor more to be avoided by me, in this declining age. Loe here my three most favoured and particular employments. I speake not of those I owe of dutie to the world.

CHAP. IIII

Of diverting and diversions

I WAS once employed in comforting of a truly-afflicted Ladie: the greatest part of their discourses are artificiall and ceremonious.

The
essence of comforting

*Uberibus semper lachrimis, semperque paratis,
In statione sua, atque expectantibus illam,
Quo jubeat manare modo.*—JUVEN. Sat. vi. 273.

With plenteous teares; still readie in their stand,
Expecting still their Mistresses commaund,
How they must flow, when they must goe.

Men do but ill in opposing themselves against this passion; for opposition doth but incense and engage them more to sorrow and quietnesse: The disease is exasperated by the jealousie of debate. In matters of common discourse, we see, that what I have spoken without heede or care, if one come to contest with me about it, I stifly maintaine and make good mine owne; much more if it be a thing wherein I am interested. Besides, in so dooing, you enter but rudely into your matter, whereas a Physitions first entertainment of his patient should be gracious, cheerefull and pleasing. An uglie and froward Physition wrought never any good effect. On the contrary then, we must at first assist and smoothe their laments, and witnesse some approbation and excuse thereof. By which meanes you get

Mon-
taigne
comforts
an afflicted
lady

credit to go on, and by an easie and insensible inclination, you fall into more firme and serious discourses and fit for their amendment. But I, who desired chiefly to gull the assistants, that had their eyes cast on me, meant to salve their mischiefe: I verily finde by experience, that I have but an ill and unfruitfull vaine to perswade. I present my reasons either too sharpe, or too drie, or too stirringly or too carelesly. After I had for a while applyed my selfe to hir torment, I attempted not to cure it by strong and lively reasons: either because I want them, or because I suppose I might otherwise effect my purpose the better. Nor did I cull out the severall fashions of comfort prescribed by philosophy: That the thing lamented is not ill, as Cleanthes: or but a little ill, as the Peripatetikes: That to lament is neither just, nor commendable, as Chrysippus: Nor this Epicurus, most agreeing with my manner, to translate the conceit of yrkesome into delightsome things: Nor to make a loade of all this masse, dispensing the same, as one hath occasion, as Cicero. But faire and softly declining our discourses, and by degrees bending them unto subjects more neare; then a little more remote, even as shee more or lesse enclined to mee. I unperceaveably remooved those dolefull humours from hir: so that as long as I was with her, so long I kept her in cheerefull countenance; and untroubled fashion, wherein I used diversion. Those which in the same service succeded mee, found her no whit amended: the reason was, I had not yet driven

my wedge to the roote. I have peradventure else where, glaunched at some kindes of publike diversions. And the militarie customes used by Pericles in the Peloponesian warre, and a thousand others else where, to divert or with-drawe the armie of an enemie from their owne country, is too frequent in histories. It was an ingenious diverting, where-with the Lord of Himbercourt saved both himselfe and others in the towne of Liege, into which the Duke of Burgondie, who beleagred the same, had caused him to enter, to performe the covenants of their accorded yeelding. The inhabitants thereof, to provide for it, assembled by night, and began to mutinie against their former agreement, determining upon this advantage to set upon the Negotiators, now in their power. Hee perceiv-ing their intent, and noise of this shoure readie
 to fall upon him, and the danger his lodging was in, forth-with rushed out upon them two cittizens (whereof he had divers with him) furnished with most plausible and new offers to be propounded to their counsell; but indeed forged at that instant to serve his turne withall, and to amuse them. These two stayes the first approaching storme, and carryed this incensed Hydra-headed-monster multitude backe to the towne-house, to heare their charge, and accordingly to determine of it. The conclusion was short; when loe a second tempest came rushing on, more furiously intraged then the former; to whom he immediately dispatched foure new and semblable intercessors, with protestations that

Diversions in tumults

The story of Atalanta now they were in earnest to propose and declare new and farre more ample conditions unto them, wholly to their content and satisfaction ; whereby this disordered rout was againe drawne to their Conclave and Senate-house. In summe, he by such a dispensation of amusements, diverting their headlong fury, and dissipating the same with vaine and frivolous consultations, at length lulled them into so secure a sleep, that he gained the day, which was his chiefest drift and only aymed scope. This other storie is also of the same predicament. Atalanta a maid of rare surpassing beautie, and of a wondrous strange disposition to ridde herselfe from the importunate pursuit of a thousand amorous sutors, who sollicitied her for mariage, prescribed this law unto them ; that shee would accept of him that should equall her in running : on condition those she shold overcome might lose their lives. Some there were found, who deemed this prize worthie the hazard, and who incurred the penaltie of so cruell a match. Hippomenes comming to make his assay after the rest, devoutly addressed himselfe to the divine protectresse of all amorous delights, earnestly invoking her assistance : who gently listning to his hearty prayers, furnished him with three golden Apples, and taught him how to use them. The scope of the race being plaine, according as Hippomenes perceived his swift-footed mistresse to approach his heeles, he let fall (as at unawares) one of his Apples : the heedlesse maiden gazing and wondring at the alluring beautie of it, failed not to turne and take it up.

Obstupuit virgo, nitidique cupidine pomi, Declinat cursus, aurumque volubile tollit.

—OVID. Met. x. 666.

Diver-
sions of the mind

The maid amaz'd, desiring that faire gold,
Turnes by her course, takes it up as it rold.

The like he did (at his need) with the second and third, untill by this digressing and diverting, the goale and advantage of the course was judged his. When Physitians cannot purge the rheume, they divert and remoove the same unto some lesse dangerous part. I also perceive it to be the most ordinary receipt for the mindes diseases. Abducendus etiam nonnunquam animus est ad aliena studia, sollicitudines, curas negotia: Loci denique mutatione, tanquam ægroti non convalescentes, sæpe curandus est: Our minde also is sometimes to be diverted to other studies, cogitations, cares and businesses: and lastly to be cured by change of place, as sicke folkes use, that otherwise cannot get health. We make it seldome to shooke mischiefes with direct resistance: we make it neither to beare nor to break, but to shun or divert, the blow. This other lesson is too high, and over-hard. It is for him of the first ranke, meerely to stay upon the thing it selfe, to examine and judge it. It belongeth to one onely Socrates, to accost and entertaine death with an undaunted ordinary visage, to become familiar and play with it. He seeketh for no comfort out of the thing it selfe. To die seemeth unto him a naturall and indifferent accident: thereon he wishly fixeth his sight, and thereon he resolveth without looking else-

Con- sideration diverted from death

where. Hegesias his disciples, who with hunger starv'd themselves to death, incensed thereunto with the perswading discourses of his lessons; and that so thicke as King Ptolomey forbad him any longer to entertaine his schoole with such murtherous precepts. Those considered not death in it selfe, they judged it not: This was not the limit of their thoughts, they run on, and ayme at another being. Those poore creatures we see on scaffolds, fraught with an ardent devotion, therein to the uttermost of their power, employing al their sences; their eares attentive to such instructions as Preachers give them, their hands and eyes lift up towards heaven; their voice uttering loud and earnest praiers; all with an eager and continuall ruth-mooving motion; doe verily what in such an unavoydable exigent is commendable and convenient. One may well commend their religion, but not properly their constancy. They shunne the brunt; they divert their consideration from death; as we use to dandle and busie children, when we would lance them or let them bloud. I have seen some, who if by fortune they chanced to cast their eyes towards the dreadful preparations of death, which were round about them, fal into trances, and with fury cast their cogitations elsewhere. Wee teach those that are to passe over some steepy downe fall or dreadfull abisse, to shut or turne aside their eies. Subrius Flavius, being by the appointment of Nero to be put to death by the hands of Niger, both chiefe commanders in war: when he was brought unto the place where the execution should be performed, seeing the pit Niger had caused to be digged for him uneven and unhandsomely made : Nor is this pit (quoth he to the souldiers that stood about him) according to the true discipline of war : And to Niger, who willed him to hold his head stedly, I wish thou wouldest stricke as steddily. He guessed right ; for Nigers arme trembling, he had divers blowes at him before he could strike it off. This man seemeth to have fixed his thoughts surely and directly on the matter. He that dies in the fury of a battle, with weapons in hand thinkes not then on death, and neither feeleth, nor considereth the same : the heate of the fight transports him. An honest man of my acquaintance, falling downe in a single combate, and feeling himselfe stab'd nine or ten times by his enemy, was called unto by the by standers to call on God and remember his conscience : but he told me after, that albeit those voices came unto his eares, they had no whit mooved him, and that he thought on nothing, but how to discharge and revenge himselfe. In which combat he vanquished and slew his adversary.

The heat
of battle

He who brought L. Syllanus his condemnation, did much for him : in that when he heard him answer he was prepared to die, but not by the hands of base villaines, ran upon him with his souldiers to force him ; against whom obstinately defending himself though unarmed with fists and feet : he was slaine in the conflict : dispercing with a ready and rebellious choller the painefull

Hope in the future out-weighs present pains sence of a long and fore-prepared death: to which he was assigned. We ever thinke on somewhat else: either the hope of a better life doth settle and support us, or the confidence of our childrens worth, or the future glory of our name, or the avoyding of these lives mischieves, or the revenge hanging over their heads that have caused and procured our death:

Spero equidem mediis, si quid pia numina possunt, Supplicia hausurum scopulis, et nomine Dido Sæpe vocaturum. —VIRG. Aen. iv. 382.
Audiam, et hæc manes veniet mihi fama sub imos.

—387.

I hope, if powers of heaven have any power,
On rockes he shall be punisht, at that houre,
He oft on Didoes name shall pittillesse exclaime,
This shall I heare, and this report, shall to me in my grave resort.

Xenophon sacrificed with a crowne on his head, when one came to tell him the death of his sonne Gryllus in the battell of Mantineæ. At the first hearing whereof he cast his crowne to the ground, but finding upon better relation how valiantly he died, he tooke it up and put it on his head againe. Epicurus also at his death comforted himselfe in the eternitie and worth of his writings. Omnes clari et nobilitati labores fiunt tolerabiles (CIC. Tusc. ii.). All glorious and honourable labours are made tolerable. And the same wound, and the same toile (saith Xenophon) toucheth not a Generall of an armie, as it doth a private souldier. Epaminondas tooke his death much the more cheerefully, being informed that the victorie remained on his side. Hæc sunt solatia, hæc fomenta summorum dolorum (Ibid.): These are the comforts, these the eases of most grievous paines. And such other like circumstances amuse, divert and remoove us from the consideration of the thing in it selfe. Even the arguments of Philosophie, at each clappe wrest and turne the matter aside, and scarcely wipe away the scabbe thereof. The first man of the first Philosophicall Schoole and Superintendent of the rest, that great Zeno, against death, cried out; No evill is honourable; death is: therefore is death no evill. Against drunkenesse; No man entrusts his secrets to a drunkard; every one to the wise: therefore the wise will not be drunke. Is this to hit the white? I love to see, that these principall wits cannot rid themselves of our company. As perfect and absolute as they would be, they still are but grosse and simple men. Revenge is a sweet-pleasing passion, of a great and naturall impression: I perceive it well, albeit I have made no triall of it. To divert of late a young prince from it, I told him not, he was to offer the one side of his cheeke, to him, who had strooke him on the other, in regard of charity; nor displaid I unto him the tragicall events Poesie bestoweth upon that passion. There I left him, and strove to make him taste the beautie of a contrary image: the honour, the favour and the good-will he should acquire by gentlenesse and goodnesse: I diverted him to ambition. Behold how they deale in such cases. If your affection in love be over-

Arguments of philosophers

The division of love powerfull, disperse or dissipate the same, say they ;
and they say true, for I have often, with profit made triall of it : Breake it by the vertue of severall desires, of which one may be Regent
or chiefe Master, if you please ; but for feare
it should misuse and tyrannize you, weaken it with dividing, and protract it with diverting the same.

Cum morosa vago singultiet inguine vena, Conjicito humorem collectum in corpora quæque.

—PERS. Sat. vi. 73. LUCR. iv. 1056.

When raging lust excites a panting tumor,
To divers parts send that collected humor.

And looke to it in time, lest it vex you, if it
have once seized on you.

Si non prima novis conturbes vulnera plagis, Volgivagâque vagus Venere ante recentia cures.

—LUCR. iv. 1061.

Unlesse the first wounds with new wounds you mix,
And ranging cure the fresh with common tricks.

I was once neerely touched with a heavy displeasure, according to my complexion ; and yet more just then heavie : I had peradventure lost my selfe in it, had I only relied upon mine
owne strength. Needing a vehement diversion to with-draw me from it ; I did by Arte and studie make my selfe a Lover, whereto my age assisted me ; love discharged and diverted me
from the inconvenience, which good-wil and amitie had caused in me. So is it in all things else. A sharpe conceit possesseth, and a violent imagination holdeth me: I finde it a shorter Ease of course to alter and divert, then to tame and change

 vanquish the same: if I cannot substitute a contrary unto it, at least I present another unto
 it. Change ever easeth, Varietie dissolveth, and shifting dissipateth. If I cannot buckle with it,
 I flie from it: and in shunning it, I stray and double from it. Shifting of place, exercise and company, I save my selfe amid the throng of other studies and amusements, where it loseth
 my tracke, and so I slip away. Nature proceedeth thus, by the benefit of inconstancy: For, the time it hath bestowed on us, as a soveraigne physition of our passions, chiefly obtaines his purpose that way, when fraughting our conceits with other and different affaires, it dissolveth and corrupteth that first apprehension, how forcible soever it be. A wise man seeth little lesse his friend dying at the end of five and twenty yeeres, then at the beginning of the first yeere;
 and according to Epicurus, nothing lesse: for
 he ascribed no qualification of perplexities, either to the foresight or antiquitie of them. But so many other cogitations, crosse this, that it lan-guisheth, and in the end groweth weary. To divert the inclination of vulgar reports, Alcibiades
 cut off his faire dogs eares and taile, and so drove him into the market place; that giving this subject of prattle to the people, they might not meddle with his other actions. I have also seen some women, who to divert the opinions and conjectures of the babling people, and to divert the fond tatling of some, did by counterfet and

‘A little thing doth divert and turne us; dissembled affections, overshadow and cloak true affections. Amongst which I have noted some, who in dissembling and counterfeiting have suffered themselves to be intrapped wittingly and in good earnest; quitting their true and originall humour for the fained: of whom I learne, that such as finde themselves well seated, are very fooles to yeelde unto that maske. The common greetings, and publike entertainements being reserved unto that set or appointed servant, beleeve there is little sufficiency in him, if in the end he usurpe not your roome and send you unto his. This is properly to cut out and stitch up a shoe, for another to put on. A little thing doth divert and turne us; for a small thing holds us. We do not much respect subjects in grosse and alone: they are circumstances, or small and superficial images that moove and touch us; and vaine rindes which rebound from subjects.

*Folliculos ut nunc teretes æstate cicadæ
Linguunt.*—LUCR. v. 812.

As grasse-hoppers in summer now forsake
The round-grown sheafes, which they in time should take.

Plutarke himselfe bewailes his daughter by the fopperies of his childehood. The remembrance of a farewell, of an action, of a particular grace, or of a last commendation, afflict us. Cæsars gowne disquieted all Rome, which his death had not done; The very sound of names, which gingleth in our eares, as, Oh my poore master; or, Alas my deare friend; Oh my good father; or, Alas my sweete daughter. When such like repetitions pinch me, and that I looke more nearely to them, I finde them but grammaticall laments, the word and the tune wound me. Even as Preachers exclamations do often move their auditory more, then their reasons : and as the pittifull groane of a beast yerneth us though it be killed for our use : without poisoning or entring there-whilest, into the true and massie essence of my subject.

for a small thing
holds us'

His se stimulis dolor ipse lacescit.—LUCAN. ii. 42.

Griefe by these provocations,
Puts it selfe in more passions.

They are the foundations of our mourning. The concept of the stone, namely in the yard, hath sometime for three or foure dayes together, so stopped my urine, and brought me so neare deaths-doore that it had beene meere folly in me, to hope, nay to desire, to avoyd the same, considering what cruell pangs that painefull plight did seaze me with. Oh how cunning a master in the murthering arte, or hangmans trade, was that good Emperour, who caused malefactors yards to bee fast-tide, that so hee might make them dye for want of pissing. In which ill plight finding my selfe, I considered by how slight causes and frivolous objects, imagination nourished in me the grieve to lose my life : with what Atomes the consequence and difficulty of my dislodging was contrived in my minde : to what idle conceits and frivolous cogitations we give place in so waighty a case or important affaire. A Dogge, a Horse, a Hare, a Glasse,

Causes of sorrow and what not? were [counted] in my losse. To others, their ambitious hopes, their purse, their learning: In my minde as sottishly. I view death carelessly when I behould it universally as the end of life. I over-whelme and contemne it thus in great, by retayle it spoiles and proules me. The teares of a Lacquey, the distributing of my cast sutes, the touch of a knowne hand, an ordinary consolation: doth disconsolate and intender me. So do the plaints and fables of trouble vex our mindes: and the wailing laments of Dydo, and Ariadne passionate even those, that beleewe them not in Virgill, nor in Catullus: It is an argument of an obstinate nature, and indurate hart, not to be moved therewith: as for a wonder, they report of Polemon: who was not so much as appaled, at the biting of a Dog, who tooke away the braun or calfe of his leg. And no wisdom goeth so far, as by the due judgement to conceive aright the evident cause of a Sorrow and griefe, so lively and wholly, that it suffer or admit no accession by presence, when eies and eares have their share therein: parts that cannot be agitated but by vaine accidents. Is it reason, that even arts should serve their purposes, and make their profit of our imbecillity and naturall blockishnes? An Orator (saith Rhetorick) in the play of his pleading, shall be moved at the sound of his owne voice, and by his fained agitations: and suffer himselfe to be cozoned by the passion he representeth: imprinting a lively and essentiall sorrow, by the jugling he acteth, to transferre it into the judges, whom of the two it concerneth lesse: As the persons hired at our funerals who to aide the ceremony of mourning, make sale of their teares by measure, and of their sorrow by waight. For although they strive to act it in a borrowed forme, yet by habituating and ordering their countenance, it is certaine they are often wholly transported into it, and entertaine the impression of a true and unfained melancholly. I assisted amongst divers others of his friends, to convey the dead corpes of the Lord of Grammont from the siege of Laferre, where he was untimely slaine, to Soissons. I noted that every where as we passed a long, we filled with lamentation and teares all the people we met, by the onely shew of our convoies mourning attire; for the deceased mans name was not so much as known, or heard of about those quarters. Quintilian reporteth, to have seene Comedians so farre ingaged in a sorrowfull part, that they wept after being come to their lodgings: and of himselfe, that having undertaken to move a certaine passion in another: he had found himselfe surprised not only with shedding of teares, but with a palenesse of countenance, and behaviour of a man truly dejected with griefe. In a country neare our Mountaines, the women say and unsay, weepe and laugh with one breath: as Martin the Priest; for, as for their lost husbands they encrease their waymentings by repetition of the good and gracefull parts they were endowed with, there withall under one they make publike relation of those imperfections; to work, as it were some recompence unto themselves, and woe causes

The ceremony of
mourning

Slight causes of fury transchange their pittie unto disdain; with a much better grace then we, who when we loose a late acquaintance, strive to loade him with new and forged prayses, and to make him farre other, now that we are deprived of his sight, then hee seemed to be when we enjoied and beheld him. As if mourning were an instructing party; or teares cleared our understanding by washing the same. I renounce from this time forward all the favourable testimonies any man shall affoord me, not because I shall deserve them, but because I shall be dead. If one demand that fellow, what interest he hath in such a siege; The interest of example (will he say) and common obedience of the Prince; I nor looke, nor pretend any benefit thereby; and of glory I know how small a portion commeth to the share of a private man, such as I am. I have neither passion nor quarrell in the matter; yet the next day shall you see him all changed, and chafing, boiling and blushing with rage, in his ranke of battaile, ready for the assault. It is the glaring reflecting of so much steele, the flashing thundering of the Canon, the clang of trumpets, and the ratling of Drummes, that have infused this new fury, and rankor in his swelling vaines. A frivolous cause, will you say. How a cause? There needeth none to excite our minde. A doating humour without body, without substance overswayeth and tosseth it up and downe. Let me thinke of building Castles in Spayne, my imagination will forge me commodities and afford me meanes and delights wherewith my minde is really tickled and essentially gladdened. How often do we pester our spirits with anger or sadness by such shadows, and entangle our selves into fantastick passions which alter both our mind and body? what astonished, fearing and confused mumpes and mowes doth this dotage stirre up in our visages? what skippings and agitations of members and voice, seemes it not by this man alone, that he hath false visions of a multitude of other men with whom he doth negotiate; or some inward Goblin that torments him? Enquire of your selfe, where is the object of this alteration? Is there any thing but us in nature, except subsisting nullity? over whom it hath any power? Because Cambyses dreamed that his brother should be King of Persia, he put him to death: a brother whom he loved, and ever trusted. Aristodemus King of the Messenians killed himselfe, upon a conceite he tooke of some ill presage, by, I know not what howling of his Dogs. And King Midas did asmuch, being troubled and vexed by a certaine displeasing dreame of his owne. It is the right way to prize ones life at the right worth of it, to forgo it for a dreame. [Heare] notwithstanding our mindes triumph over the bodies weakenesses and misery: in that it is the prey and marke of all wrongs and alterations, to feede on and aime at. It hath surely much reason to speake of it.

Beguiling
dreams

O prima infelix fingenti terra Prometheus:

Ille parum cauti pectoris egit opus.

Corpora disponens, mentem non vidit in arte:

Recta animi primum debuit esse via.—PROP. iii. El. iv. 7.

A slack-ened bridle
at times

Unhappy earth first by Prometheus formed,
Who of small providence a worke performed:
He framing bodies saw in arte no minde;
The mindes way first should rightly be assign'd.

CHAP. V

Upon some verses of Virgil

PROFITABLE thoughts, the more full and solide they are, the more combersome and heavy are they; vice, death, poverty and diseases, are subjects that waigh and grieve. We must have our minde instructed with meanes to sustaine and combate mischiefes, and furnished with rules how to live well and believe right: and often rouze and exercise it in this goodly study. But to a minde of the common stampe; it must be with intermission and moderation; it groweth weake, by being continually overwrested: When I was young, I had neede to be advertised, and sollicitated to keepe my selfe in office: Mirth and health (saies one) sute not so well with these serious and grave discourses. I am now in another state. The conditions of age do but over-much admonish, instruct, and preach unto me. From the excesse of jollity, I am falne into the extreame of severity: more peevisish and more untoward. Therefore, I do now of purpose somewhat give way unto licentious allurements; and now and then employ my minde in wanton and youthfull conceits, wherein

she recreates hir selfe. I am now but too much needful settled; too heavy and too ripe. My yeares read for ordime daily a lesson of coldnesse and temperance. nary folk
 My body shunneth disorder, and feares it: it hath his turne to direct the minde toward reformation; his turne also to rule and sway; and that more rudely and imperiously. Be I awake or a sleepe, it doth not permit me one houre but
 to ruminare on instruction, on death, on patience, and on repentance. As I have heretofore defended my selfe from pleasure, so I now ward
 my selfe from temperance: it haleth me too far back, and even to stupidity. I will now every way be master of my selfe. *Wisdom hath hir
 excesses, and no lesse need of moderation, then follie.*
 So that least I should wither, [tarnish] and over cloy my selfe with prudence, in the intermissions
 my evils affoord mee;

Mens intenta suis ne siet: usque malis.

—OVID. Trist. iv. El. i. 4.

Still let not the conceit attend,
 The ils that it too much offend.

I gently turne aside, and steale mine eyes from viewing that tempestuous and cloudy skie, I have before me; which (thanks be to God) I consider without feare, but not without contention and study. And amuse my selfe with the remembrance of passed youth-tricks:

—animus quod perdidit, optat,

Atque in præterita se totus imagine versat.

—PETRON. ARB. Sat.

The minde, what it hath lost, doth wish and cast,
 And turne and wind in Images forepast.

The change from youth to age That infancy looketh forward, and age backward; was it not that which Janus his double visage signified? yeares entraine me if they please: but backward. As far as mine eyes can discern that faire expired season, by fits I turne them thitherward. If it escape my bloud and veines, yet will I not roote the image of it out of my memory:

—hoc est,

Vivere bis, vita posse priore frui.

—MART. X. Epig. xxiii. 7.

This is the way for any to live twise,
Who can of former life enjoy the price.

Plato appoints old men to be present at youthfull exercises, dances and games, to make them rejoyce at the bodies agility and comliness of others, which is now no longer in them; and call to their remembrance, the grace and favour of that blooming age: and willeth them to give the honour of the victory to that young-man, who hath gladdened and made most of them mery. I was heretofore wont to note sullen and gloomy daies, as extraordinary: now are they my ordinary ones: the extraordinary are my faire and cleere dayes. I am ready to leape for joy, as at the receaving of some unexpected favour, when nothing grieveth me. Let me tickle my selfe, I can now hardly wrest a bare smile from this wretched body of mine. I am not pleased but in conceite and dreaming, by sleight to turne aside the way-ward cares of age: but sure there is need of other remedies, then dreaming. A weake contention of arte against nature. It is meere simplicity, as most men do, to prolong and anticipate humane incommodities. I had rather be lesse while olde, then old before my time. I take hold even of the least occasions of delight I can meet withall. I know now by heare-say divers kindes of wise, powerfull and glorious pleasures: but opinion is not of sufficient force over me, to make me long for them. I would not have them so stately, lofty and disdainfull: as pleasant, gentle and ready. A natura discedimus; populo nos damus, nullius rei bono auctori (SEN. Ep. xcix.); We forsake nature, Wee follow the people author of no good. My Philosophy is in action, in naturall and present, little in conceit. What if I should be pleased to play at cob-nut, or whip a top?

Follies
of age
are not for youth

Non ponebat enim rumores ante salutem.—ENNIUS.

He did not prize what might be said,
Before how all might safe be laid.

Voluptuousnesse is a quality little ambitious; it holds it selfe rich enough of it selfe without any accesse of reputation; and is best affected where it is most obscured. That young man should deserve the whip, who would spend his time in choosing out the neatest Wine and best sauces. There is nothing I ever knew or esteemed lesse: I now beginne to learne it. I am much ashamed of it, but what can I do withall? and am more ashamed and vexed, at the occasions that compell me to it. It is for us to dally, doate and trifle out the time; and for youth to stand upon nice reputation, and hold by the better

Amuse- end of the staffe. That creepeth towards the ments world and marcheth toward credite; we come of age from it. *Sibi arma, sibi equos, sibi hastas, sibi
clavam, sibi pilam, sibi [natationes] et cursus habeant:
nobis senibus, ex lusionibus multis, talos relinquunt,
et tesseras* (CIC. De Sene.) ; Let them keepe their armor, their horses, their lances, their polaxes, their tennis, their swimming, and their running; and of their many games, let them put over to us old men
the tables and the cardes. The very lawes send us home to our lodgings. I can do no lesse in favour of this wretched condition, whereto my age forceth mee, then furnish it with somewhat to dandle and amuse it selfe, as it were childe-hood; for when all is done we fall into it againe.
And both wisdom and folly shall have much a do, by enterchange of offices to support and suc-
cour me in this calamity of age.

Misce stultitiam consiliis brevem.

—HOR. iv. Od. xii. 27.

With short-like-foolish tricks,
Thy gravest counsels mixe.

Withal I shun the lightest pricklings; and those which heretofore could not have scratcht me, do now transpearce me. So wilingly my habite doth now begin to apply it selfe to evil:
in fragili corpore odiosa omnis offensio est (CIC. De Sene.) : all offence is yrkesome to a crased body.

Mensque pati durum sustinet ægra nihil.

—OVID. Pont. i. El. vi. 13.

A sicke minde can endure,
No hard thing for hir cure.

I have ever beene ticklish and nice in matters of offence, at this present I am more tender, and every where open. An offer of essays

Et minimæ vires frangere quassa valent.

—OVID. Trist. iii. El. xi. 22.

Least strength can breake,
Things worne and weake.

Well may my judgement hinder me from spurning and repining at the inconveniences which nature allots me to indure; from feeling them it cannot. I could finde in my heart to runne from one ende of the world to another, to searche and purchase one yeare of pleasing and absolute tranquillity; I who have no other scope, then to live and be mery. Drouzie and stupide tranquillity is sufficiently to be found for me, but it makes me drouzy and dizzie: therefore I am not pleased with it. If there be any body, or any good company in the cuntry, in the citty, in France, or any where els, resident [or] travelling, that likes of my conceites, or whose humours are pleasing to me, they neede but hold up their hand, or whistle in their fiste, and I will store them with Essayes, of pithe and substance, with might and maine. Seeing it is the mindes privilege to renew and recover it selfe on old age, I earnestly advise it to do it: let it bud, blossome, and flourish if it can, as Misle-toe on a dead tree. I feare it is a traitor; so straightly is she clasped, and so hard doth she cling to my body, that every hand-while she forsakes me; to follow hir in hir necessities. I flatter hir in private, I

The lusti-
ness of health urge hir to no purpose; in vaine I offer to divert hir from this combination, and bootlesse it is for me to present hir Seneca or Catullus, or Ladies, or stately dances; if hir companion have the chollicke, it seemes she also hath it. The very powers or faculties that are particular and proper to hir, cannot then rouze themselves: they evidently seeme to be en-rheumed: there is no blithnes in hir productions, if there be none in the body. Our schollers are to blame, who serching the causes of our mindes extraordinary fits and motions, besides they ascribe some to a divine fury, to love, to warre-like fiercenesse, to Poesie, and to Wine; if they have not also allotted health her share. A health youthfull, lusty, vigorous, full, idle, such as heretofore the Aprill of my yeares and security afforded me by fittes. That fire of jocondnesse stirreth up lively and bright sparkles in our mind, beyond our naturall brightnesse and amongst the most working if not the most desperate Enthusiasmes or inspirations. Well, it is no wonder if a contrary estate clogge and naile my spirit, and drawe from it a contrary effect.

Ad nullum consurgit opus, cum corpore languet.

—COR. GAL. El. i. 125.

It to no worke doth rise,
When body fainting lyes.

And yet would have me beholden to him, for lending (as he sayth) much lesse to this consent, then beareth the ordinary custome of men. Let us at least whilst we have [truce] chase all evils, and expell all difficulties from our society.

Dum licet obducta solvatur fronte senectus :

—HOR. Epod. xiii. 7.

With wrinckled wimpled forehead let old yeares,
While we may, be resolv'd to merrie cheere.

Virtue
of light-
someness

Tetrica sunt amænanda jocularibus, Unpleasant things, and sowre matters should be sweetned and made pleasant with sportefull mixtures. I love a lightsome and civill discretion, and loathe a roughnes and austerity of behaviour: suspecting every peevish and way ward countenance.

Tristemque vultus tetrici arrogantiam.

—MART. vii. Epig. lvii. 9.

Of austere countenance,
The sad soure arrogance.

Et habet tristis quoque turba cynædos.

Fidlers are often had,
Mongst people that are sad.

I easily beleeeve Plato, who saieth, that ease or hard humors, are a great prejudice unto the mindes goodnesse or badnesse. Socrates had a constant countenance, but light-some and smyl-ing: not frowardly constant, as old Crassus, who was never seene to laugh. Vertue is a pleasant and buxom quality. Few, I know will snarle at the liberty of my writings, that have not more cause to snarle at their thoughts-loosenes. I conforme my selfe unto their courage, but I offend their eies. It is a well ordered humour to wrest Platos writings, and straine his pretended negotiations with Phedon, Dion, Stella, Archeanassa. Non pudeat dicere, quod non pudeat

‘Let us not bee ashamed to speake,
sentire. Let us not bee ashamed to speake, what we shame not to thinke. I hate a way ward and sad disposition, that glideth over the pleasures of his life, and fastens and feedes on miseries. As flyes that cannot cleave to smooth and sleeke bodies, but seaze and holde on rugged and uneven places. Or as Cupping glasses, that affect and suck none but the worst bloud. For my part I am resolved to dare speake whatsoever I dare do: And am displeased with thoughts not to be published. The worst of my actions or condicions seeme not so ugly unto me, as I finde it both ugly and base not to dare to avouch them. Every one is wary in the confession; we should be as heedy in the action. The bouldnes of offending is somewhat recompensed and restrained by the bouldnes of confessing. He that should be bound to tell all, should also bind himselfe to do nothing which one is forced to conceale. God graunt this excesse of my licence draw men to freedom, beiond these cowardly and squeamish vertues, sprung from our imperfections; and that by the expence of my immoderation, I may reduce them unto reason. One must survey his faultes and study them, ere he be able to repeat them. Those which hide them from others, commonly conceale them also from themselves; and esteeme them not sufficiently hidden, if themselves see them. They withdraw and disguise them from their owne consciences. Quare vicia confitetur? Quia etiam nunc in illis est, somnium narrare vigilantis est (SEN. Ep. 53 m.). Why doth no man confesse his faults?

Because hee is yet in them ; and to declare his dreame, is for him that is waking. The bodies evils are discerned by their increase. And now we finde that to be the gout which we termed the rheume or a bruse. The evils of the mind are darkened by their own force ; the most infected feeleth them least. Therefore is it, that they must often a day be handled, and violently be opened and rent from out the hollow of our bosome. As in the case of good ; so of bad offices, only confession is sometimes a satisfaction. Is there any deformity in the error, which dispenseth us to confesse the same ? It is a paine for me to dissemble : so that I refuse to take charge of other mens secrets, as wanting hart to disavow my knowledge. I [can] conceale it ; but deny it I cannot, without much a do and some trouble. To be perfectly secret, one must be so by nature ; not by obligation. It is a small matter to be secret in the Princes service, if one be not also a liar. He that demanded Thales Milesius, whether he should solemnly deny his lechery ; had he come to me, I would have answered him, he ought not do it : for a ly is in mine opinion, worse then lechery. Thales advised him otherwise, bidding him sweare, thereby to warrant the more by the lesse. Yet was not his counsell so much the election, as multiplication of vice. Whereupon we sometimes use this by-word, that we deale wel with a man of conscience, when in counterpoise of vice we propose some difficulty unto him ? but when he is inclosed betweene two vices, he is what we shame

not to thinke,

Mon- put to a hard choise. As Origen was dealt taigne's with al, either to commit idolatry, or suffer him-
 public selfe to be Sodomatically abused by a filthy
 confes- Egyptian slave, that was presented unto him;
 sion he yeilded to the first condition, and viciously,
 saith one. Therefore should not those women be distasted, according to their error, who of late protest, that they had rather charge their conscience with ten men, then one Masse: If it be indiscretion so to divulge ones errors, ther is no danger though it come into example and use.
 For Ariston said, [that] The winds men feare most,
are those which discover them. Wee must tuck up this homely rag that cloaketh our manners.
 They send their conscience to the stews, and keepe their countenance in order. Even traitors and murtherers observe the laws of complements, and thereto fixe their endevors. So that neither can injustice complaine of incivility, nor malice
 of indiscretion. 'Tis pittie a bad man is not also a foole, and that decency should cloak his vice.
 These pargettings belong only to good and sound
 wals, such as deserve to be whited, to be preserved. In favour of Hugonots, who accuse our auricular and private confession, I confesse my selfe in publike; religiously and purely. Saint Augustine, Origine, and Hippocrates, have published [the] errors of their opinions; I likewise of my maners. I greedily long to make my selfe knowne; nor care I at what rate, so it be truly: or to say better, I hunger for nothing;
 but I hate mortally to be mistaken by such as shall happen to know my name. He that doth all for honor and glory, what thinks he to gaine by presenting himselfe to the world in a maske, hiding his true being from the peoples knowledge? Commend a crook-back for his comely stature, he ought to take it as an injury: if you be a coward, and one honoreth you for a valiant man, is it of you he speaketh? you are taken for another: I should like as well, to have him glory in the courtesies and lowtings that are shewed him, supposing himselfe to be ring-leader of a troupe when he is the meanest folower of it. Archelaus King of Macedon, passing through a street som body cast water upon him, was advised by his followers to punish the party: yea but (quoth he) who ever it was, he cast not the water upon me, but upon him he thought I was. Socrates to one that told him he was railed upon and ill spoken of; Tush (said he) there is no such thing in me. For my part, should one commend me to be an excellent Pilote, to be very modest, or most chaste, I should owe him no thanks. Likewise should any man call me traitour, theefe or drunkard, I would decme my selfe but little wronged by him. Those who misknow themselves, may feed themselves with false approbations; but not I, who see and search my selfe into my very bowels, and know full well what belongs unto me. I am pleased to be lesse commended, provided I be better knowne. I may be esteemed wise for such conditions of wisdom, that I account meere follies. It vexeth me, that my Essayes serve Ladies in liew of common ware and stuffe for

Carelessness of blame

'Bashfulness is an ornament to youth,

their hall: this Chap. wil preferre me to their cabinet: I love their society somewhat private; their publike familiarity wants favor and savor. In farewels we heate above ordinary our affections to the things we forgo. I here take my last leave of this worlds pleasures: loe here our last embraces. And now to our theame. Why was the acte of generation made so naturall, so necessary and so just, seeing we feare to speake of it without shame, and exclude it from our serious and regular discourses? we prononce boldly, to rob, to murther, to betray; and this we dare not but betweene our teeth. Are we to gather by it, that the lesse we breath out in words the more we are allowed to furnish our thoughts with? For words least used, least written and least concealed should best be understood, and most generally knowne. No age, no condition are more ignorant of it, then of their bread. They are imprinted in each one, without expressing, without voice or figure. And the sexe that doth it most, is most bound to suppress it. It is an action we have put in the precincts of silence, whence to draw it were an offence: not to accuse or judge it. Nor dare we [beate] it but in circumlocution and picture. A notable favour, to a criminal offender, to be so execrable, that justice deem it injustice to touch and behold him, freed and saved by the benefit of this condemnations severity. Is it not herein as in matters of books, which being once called-in and forbidden become more saleable and publik? As for me, I will take Aristotle

at his word that bashfullnesse is an ornament to youth, but a reproach to age. These verses are preached in the old schoole; a schoole of which I hold more then of the moderne: her vertues seeme greater unto me, her vices lesse.

but a reproach
to age'

[Ceux] qui par trop fuiant Venus estrivent
Faillent autant que ceux qui trop la suivent.

Who strive ore much Venus to shunne, offends
Alike with him, that wholly hir intends.

Tu dea, tu rerum naturam sola gubernus,
Nec sine te quicquam dias in luminis oras
Exoritur, neque fit lætum, nec amabile quicquam.

—LUCR. i. 22.

Goddesse, thou rul'st the nature of all things.
Without thee nothing into this light springs.
Nothing is lovely, nothing pleasures brings.

I know not who could set Pallas and the Muses at oddes with Venus, and make them cold and slow in affecting of love; as for me, I se no Deities that better sute together, nor more endebted one to another. Who-ever shall go about to remove amorous imaginations from the Muses, shall deprive them of the best entertainment they have, and of the noblest subject of their work: and who shall debarre Cupid the service and conversation of Poesie, shall weaken him of his best weapons. By this meanes they caste upon the God of acquaintance, of amitie and goodwill; and upon the Goddesses, protectresses of humanity, and justice, the vice of ingratitude, and imputation of churlishnesse. I have not so long beene cashiered from the state

Remembrance of past pleasures and service of this God, but that my memory is still acquainted with the force of his worth and valour.

—agnosco veteris vestigia flammæ.

—VIRG. Aen. iv. 23.

I feele and feeling know, How my old flames re-grow.

There commonly remaine some reliques of shivering and heate after an ague.

Nec mihi deficiat calor hic, hyemantibus annis.

When Winter yeares com-on,
Let not this heate be gon.

As drie, as sluggish and as unwieldy as I am, I feele yet some warme cinders of my passed heate.

*Qual' l'alto Ægeo perche Aquiloneo Noto
Cessi che tuto prima il volse e scosse,
Non s'accheta ei però, ma il suono e'l moto,
Ritien deli onde anco agitate e grosse.*

As graund Ægean Sea, because the voice
Of windes doth cease, which it before enraged,
Yet doth not calme, but stil retaines the noise
And motion of huge billowes unasswaged.

But for so much as I know of it, the power and might of this God, are found more quick and lively in the shadowe of the Poesie, then in their owne essence.

Et versus digitos habet.—JUVEN. Sat. vi. 197.

Verses have full effect, Of fingers to erect.

It representeth a kinde of aire more lovely then love it selfe. Venus is not so faire, nor so alluring all naked, quick and panting, as she is here in Virgill. Virgil's Venus

*Dixerat, et niveis hinc atque hinc diva lacertis
Cunctantem amplexu molli fovet: Ille repente
Accepit solitam flammam, notusque medullas
Intravit calor, et labe facta per ossa cucurrit.
Non secus atque olim tonitru cum rupta corusco
Ignea rima micans percurrit lumine nimbos.*

—VIRG. Aen. viii. 387.

So said the Goddess, and with soft embrace,
Of Snow-white arme, the grim-fire doth enchase,
He straight tooke wonted fire, knowne heate at once,
His marrow pearc't, ranne through his weakned
bones;
As fierie flash with thunder doth divide,
With radiant lightning through a storme doth glide.

—ea verba loquutus,

*Optatos dedit amplexus, placidumque petivit.
Conjugis infusus gremio per membra soporem.*

—Ibid. 404.

A sweet embrace, when he those words had said
He gave, and his lims pleasing-rest he praid
To take in his wives bosome lolling laid.

What therein I finde to be considered, is, that he depainteth her somewhat stirring for a marittall Venus. In this discreete match, appetites are not commonly so fondling; but drowsie and more sluggish. Love disdaineth a man should hold of other then himselfe, and dealeth but faintly with acquaintances begun and entertained under another title; as mariage is. Alliances, respects and meanes, by all reason, waigh as much or more, as the grace and beauty. A man doth

Marriages
of convenience

not marry for himselfe, whatsoever he aleageth ; but as much or more for his posteritie and familie. The use and interest of mariage concerneth our off-spring, a great way beyond us. Therefore doth this fashion please me, to guide it rather by a third hand, and by anothers sence, then our owne : All which, how much doth it dissent from amorous conventions ? Nor is it other then a kinde of incest, in this reverent alliance and sacred bond, to employ the efforts and extravagant humor of an amorous licentiousnes, as I thinke to have said else-were. One should (saith Aristotle) touch his wife soberly, discreetly and severely, least that tickling too lasciviously pleasure transport her beyond the bounds of reason. What he speaketh for conscience, Phisitions alledge for health : saying that pleasure excessively whotte, voluptuous and continuall, altereth the seede, and hindereth conception. Some other say, besides that to a languishing congression (as naturally that is) to store it with a convenient, and fertile heat, one must but seldome, and by moderate intermissions present himselfe unto it.

Quo rapiet sitiens venerem interjusque recondant.

—VIRG. Georg. iii. 137.

Thirsting to snatch a fit,
And inly harbour it.

I see no mariages faile sooner, or more troubled, then such as are concluded for beauties sake, and budled up for amorous desires. There are required more solide foundations, and more constant grounds, and a more warie marching to it : Virtue and nobility this earnest youthly heate serveth to no purpose. Those who thinke to honour marriage, by joyning love unto it, (in mine opinion) doe as those, who to doe vertue a favour, holde, that nobilitie is no other thing then Vertue. Indeed these things have affinitie ; but therewithall great difference: their names and titles should not thus be commixt : both are wronged so to be confounded. Nobilitie is a worthy, goodly quality, and introduced with good reason, but in as much as it dependeth on others, and may fall to the share of my vicious and worthlesse fellowe, it is in estimation farre shorte of vertue. If it be a vertue, it is artificiall and visible ; relying both on time and fortune ; divers in forme, according unto countries: living and mortall: without birth, as the river Nilus, genealogicall and common: by succession and similitude: drawne along by consequence, but a very weake one. Knowledge, strength, goodnesse, beauty, wealth and all other qualities fall within compasse of commerce and communication: whereas this consumeth it selfe in it selfe, of no employment for the service of others. One proposed to one of our Kings the choise of two competitors in one office, the one a Gentleman, the other a Yeoman: hee appointed that without respect unto that quality, he who deserved best shold be elected: but were their valour or worth fully a-like, the Gentleman should be regarded, this was justlie to give nobilitie her right and ranke. Antigonus, to an unknowne young-man, who

The institution of caste

sued unto him for his fathers charge, a man of valour and who was lately deceased: My friend (quoth hee) in such good turnes, I waigh not my souldiers noble birth, so much as their sufficiencie. Of truth it should not be herein, as with the officers of Spartan kings; Trumpetors, Musitions, Cookees, in whose roome their children succeeded, how ignorant soever, before the best experienced in the trade. Those of Calicut make of their nobility a degree above humane. Marriage is interdicted them, and all other vocations saving warre. Of Concubines they may have as many as they list, and women as many lechardes, without Jealousie one of another. But it is a capital crime, and unremissible offence to contract or marry with any of different condition: Nay they deeme themselves disparaged and polluted, if they have but touched them in passing by. And as if their honour were much injured and interested by it they kil those who approach somewhat too neare them. In such sort, that the ignoble are bound to cry as they walke along, like the Gondoliers or Water men of Venice along the streetes, least they should justle with them: and the nobles command them to what side of the way they please. Thereby do these avoyde an obloquie which they esteeme perpetual; and those an assured death. No continuance of time, no favour of Prince, no office, no vertue, nor any wealth can make a clown to become a gentleman. Which is much furthered by this custome, that marriages of one trade with another are strictly forbidden.

A Shoo-maker cannot marry with the race of Marriage
 a Carpenter; and parents are precisely bound and love to traine up orphanes in their fathers trade, and in no other. Whereby the difference, the distinction and continuance, of their fortune is maintained.
 A good marriage (if any there be) refuseth the company and conditions of love; it endeavoureth
 to present those of amity. It is a sweete society of life, full of constancy, of trust, and an infinite number of profitable and solid offices, and mutuall
 obligations: No woman that throughly and impartially
 tasteth the same,

(Optato quam junxit lumine tæda.

—CATUL. Com. Ber. 79.

Whom loves-fire joyned in double band,
 With wished light of marriage brand)

would foregoe her estate to be her husbands master. Be she lodged in his affection, as a wife, she is much more honourably and surely lodged. Be a man passionately entangled in any unlawfull lust or love, let [him then be demanded] on whom he would rather have some shame or disgrace to alight; eyther on his law-
 full wife, or on his lechard mistris whose misfortune would afflict him most, and to whom he wisheth greater good or more honour. These questions admit no doubt in an absolute sound [marriage]. The reason we see so few good, is an apparant signe of it's worth, and a testimony of it's price. Perfectly to fashion and rightly to take it, is the worthiest and best part of our societie. We cannot be without it: and yet we disgrace and Socrates

on marriage vilifie the same. It may be compared to a cage, the birds without dispaire to get in, and those within dispaire to get out. Socrates being demanded, whether was most commodeous, to take, or not, to take a wife; Which soever a man doth (quoth he) he shall repent it. It is a match wherto may well be applied the common saying, homo homini aut Deus, aut Lupus (ERAS. Chil. i. cent. i. 69, 70). Man unto man is either a God or a Wolfe, to the perfect erecting whereof are the concurrences of divers qualities required: It is now a dayes found most fit or commodious for simple mindes and popular spirits whom dainties, curiosity and idlenes do not so much trouble. Licentious humours, debaushed conceits (as are mine) who hate all manner of duties, bondes, or observances are not so fit, so proper, and so sutable for it.

Et mihi dulce magis resolutio vivere collo.

—COR. GAL. El. i. 61.

Sweeter it is to me, with loose necke to live free.

Of mine owne disposition, would wisdomed it selfe have had me, I should have refused to wed her. But we may say our pleasure; the custome and use of common life overbeareth us. Most of my actions are guided by example, and not by election: Yet did I not properly envite my selfe unto it, I was led and brought thereunto by strange and unexpected occasions: For, not onely incommodious things, but foule, vicious and inevitable, may by some condition and accident become acceptable and allowed. So vaine is mans posture and defence. And truely I was then drawne unto it, being but ill prepared and more backward, then now I am that have made triall of it. And as licencious as the world reputes me, I have (in good truth) more stricktly observed the lawes of wedlock, then either I had promised or hoped. It is no longer time to wince when one hath put on the shackles. A man ought wisely to husband his liberty: but after he hath once submitted himselfe unto bondage, he is to stick unto it by the lawes of common duty or at least enforce himselfe to keepe them. Those which undertake that covenant to deale therein with hate and contempt, do both unjustly and incommodiously. And that goodly rule I see passe from hand to hand among women, as a sacred Oracle,

Mon-
taigne's
marriage

*Sers ton mary comme [ton] maistre:
Et t'en garde comme d'un traistre.*

Your husband as your master serve yee:
From him as from false friend preserve yee.

which is as much to say; Beare thy selfe toward him with a constrained, enemy and distrustfull reverence (a stile of warre, and cry of defiance) is likewise injurious and difficult. I am to milde for such crabbed dissignes: To say truth, I am not yet come to that perfection of sufficiency and quaintnesse of wit, as to confound reason with injustice: and laugh or scoffe at each order or rule, that jumps not with my humour. To hate superstition, I do not presently cast my selfe into irreligion. If one do

Conflict- not alwaies discharge his duty, yet ought he ing influ- at least ever love, ever acknowledge it: It is ences treason for one to marry unlesse he wed. But go we on. Our Poet describeth a marriage full of accord and good agreement, wherein notwithstanding there is not much loyalty. Did he meane it was not possible to performe loves rights, and yet reserve some rights toward marriage; and that one may bruse it, without altogether breaking it? A servant may picke his masters purse, and yet not hate him. Beauty, opportunity, destiny, (for destiny hath also a hand therin)

—fatum est in partibus illis.

*Quas sinus abscondit; nam si tibi sidera cassent,
Nil faciet longi mensura incognita nervi.*

—JUVE. Sat. ix. 32.

In those parts there is fate, which hidden are;
If then thou be not wrought-for by thy starre,
The measure of long nerves, unknowne to nothing serves.

have entangled a woman to a stranger, yet peradventure not so absolutely, but that some bond may be left to hold her to her husband. They are two dissignes, having severall and unfounded pathes leading to them. A woman may yeeld to such a man, whom in no case she would have married. I meane not for the conditions of his fortune, but for the qualities of his person. Few men have wedded their sweet hearts, their paramours or mistresses, but have come home by weeping Crosse, and ere long repented their bargain. And even in the other world, what an unquiet life leades Jupiter with his wife, whom before hee had secretly knowen, and lovingly enjoyed? This is as they say, to beray the panier, and then put it on your head. My selfe have scene in some good place, love, shamefully and dishonestly cured by mariage: the considerations are too much different. We love without disturbance to our selves; two divers and in themselves contrary things. Isocrates said, that the towne of Athens pleased men, even as Ladies doe whom wee serve for affection. Every one loved to come thither, to walke and passe away the time: but none affected to wed it: that is to say, to endenison, to dwell and habituate himselfe therein. I have (and that to my spight and grieve) scene husbands hate their wives, onely because themselves wronged them: Howsoever, wee should not love them lesse for our faults; at least for repentance and compassion they ought to be dearer unto us. These are different ends (saith he) and yet in some sort compatible. Wedlocke hath for his share honour, justice, profit and constancie: a plaine, but more generall delight. Love melts in onely pleasure; and truly it hath it more ticklish; more lively, more quaint, and more sharpe: a pleasure inflamed by difficulty: there must be a kinde of stinging, tingling and smarting. It is no longer love, be it once without Arrowes, or without fire. The liberality of Ladies is to profuse in marriage, and blunts the edge of affection and desire. To avoide this inconvenience, see the punishment inflicted by the

A difference between wedlock
and love

The eternal contention between men and women lawes of Lycurgus and Plato. But Women are not altogether in the wrong, when they refuse the rules of life prescribed to the World, forso-much as onely men have established them without their consent. There is commonly brauling and contention between them and us. And the nearest consent we have with them, is but stormy and tumultuous. In the opinion of our Authour, we heerein use them but inconsiderately. After we have knowen, that without comparison they are much more capable and violent in Loves-effects then we, as was testified by that ancient Priest, who had beene both man and woman, and tried the passions of both sexes.

Venus huic erat utraque nota:

—OVID. Meta. iii. 323. Tiros.

Of both sortes he knew venery.

We have moreover learned by their owne mouth, what tryall was made of it, though in divers ages, by an Emperour and an Empresse of Rome, both skilful and famous masters in lawlesse lust and unruly wantonnesse; for he in one night deflowred ten Sarmatian virgines, that were his captives; but shee really did one night also, answere five and twenty severall assaults, changing her assailants as she found cause to supply her neede, or fitte her taste,

—adhuc ardens rigidæ tentigine vulvæ

Et lassata viris, nondum satiata recessit.

—JUVEN. Sat. vi. 127.

And that upon the controversie happened in Catalogne, betweene a wife and a husband ; shee complaining on his over violence and continuance therein (not so much in my conceit, because she was thereby overlabored (for but by faith I beleeeve not miracles) as under this pretext, to abridge and bridle the authority of husbands over their wives, which is the fundamental part of marriage : And to shew that their frowning, sullenesse and peevishnesse exceede the very nuptiall bed, and trample under-foote the very beauties, graces and delights of Venus : to whose complaint her husband, a right churlish and rude fellow answered, that even on fasting dayes he must needes do it ten times at least) was by the Queene of Aragon given this notable sentence : by which after mature deliberation of counsel, the good Queen to establish a rule and imitable example unto all posterity, for the moderation and required modesty in a lawfull marriage, ordained the number of sixe times a day, as a lawfull, necessary and competent limit. Releasing and diminishing a great part of her sexes neede and desire : to establish (quoth she) an easie forme, and consequently permanent and immutable. Hereupon doctors cry out ; what is the appetite and lust of women, when as their reason, their reformation and their vertue, is retailed at such a rate ? considering the divers judgement of our desires : for Solon master of the lawiers schoole alloweth but three times a month because this matrimoniall intercourse should not decay or faile. Now after we beleeved (say I) and preached thus much, we

Rule
of the Queen of Aragon

Men's laws for women have for their particular portion allotted them continency ; as their last and extreame penalty. There is no passion more importunate then this, which we would have them only to resist : Not simply, as a vice in it self, but as abomination and execration, and more then irreligion and parricide ; whilst we our selves without blame or reproach offend in it at our pleasure. Even those amongst us, who have earnestly labored to overcome lust, have sufficiently [vowed] what difficulty, or rather unresistable impossibilitie they found in it, using neverthesse materiall remedies, to tame, to weaken and coole the body. And we on the other side would have them sound, healthy, strong, in good liking, wel-fed and chaste together, that is to say, both hot and colde. For marriage which we averre should hinder them from burning, affords them but smal refreshing, according as our manners are. If they meet with a husband, whose force by reason of his age is yet boyling, he will take a pride to spend it else-where.

*Sit tandem pudor, aut eamus in jus,
Multis mentula millibus redempta,
Non est hæc tua, Basse, vendidisti.*

—MART. xii. Epig. xcix. 10.

The Philosopher Polemon was justly called in question by his wife, for sowing in a barren field the fruit due to the fertile. But if they match with broken stuffe in ful wedlocke, they are in worse case, then either virgins or widowes. Wee deeme them sufficiently furnished, if they have a man lie by them. As the Romans reputed Clodia Leta a vestall virgine defloured, whom Caligula had touched, although it was manifestly proved he had but approached her: But on the contrary, their need or longing is thereby encreased; for but the touch or company of any man whatsoever stirreth up their heate, which in their solytude was husht and quiet, and lay as cinders raked up in ashes. And to the end, as it is likely, to make by this circumstance and consideration their chastitie more meritorious: Boleslaus and Kinge his wife, King and Queene of Poland, lying together, the first day of their mariage vowed it with mutuall consent, and in despight of all wedlocke commoditie of nuptiall delightes, maintained the same. Even from their infancy wee frame them to the sports of love: their instruction, behaviour, attire, grace, learning and all their words aimeth onely at love, respects onely affection. Their nurces and their keepers imprint no other thing in them, then the lovelinesse of love, were it but by continually presenting the same unto them, to distaste them of it: My daughter (al the children I have) is of the age wherein the lawes excuse the forwardest to marry. She is of a slowe, nice and milde complexion, and hath accordingly beene brought up by hir mother, in a retired and particular manner: so that shee beginneth but now to put-off childish simplicitie. She was one day reading a French booke before me, an obscene word came in her way (more bawdie in sound

Scrupulous
chastity

Unwise then in effect, it signifieth the name of a Tree
prudery and another thing) the woman that lookes to hir, staid her presently, and somewhat churlishly
 making her step over the same : I let hir alone, because I would not crosse their rules, for I
 medle nothing with this government : womens policie hath a mysticall proceeding, we must be content to leave it to them. But if I be not deceived, the conversation of twenty lacqueis
 could not in six moneths have settled in her thoughts, the understanding, the use and consequences of the sound belonging to those filthy sillables, as did that good olde woman by her checke and interdiction.

Motus doceri gaudet Ionicos.

Matura virgo, et fingitur artubus

Jam nunc, et incestos amores

De tenero meditatur ungui.

—HOR. Car. iii. Od. vi. 21.

Maides mariage-ripe straight to be taught delight
Ionique daunces, fram'de by arte aright
 In every joynt, and ev'n from their first haire
 Incestuous loves in meditation beare.

Let them somewhat dispence with ceremonies,
 let them fal into free libertie of speach ; we are but children, we are but gulles, in respect of them, about any such subject. Heare them relate how we sue, how we wooe, how we sollicitie, and how we entertaine them, they will soone give you to understand, that we can say, that we can doe, and that we can bring them
 nothing, but what they already knew, and had long before digested without us. May it be

(as Plato saith) because they have one time or other beene themselves wanton, licentious and amorous lads? Mine eares hapned one day in a place, where without suspicion they might listen and steale some of their private, lavish and bould discourses; O why is it not lawfull for me to repeate them? Birlady (quoth I to my selfe) It is high time indeed for us to studie the phrases of Amadis, the metaphors of Aretine, and eloquence of Boccace, thereby to become more skilfull, more ready and more sufficient to confront them: surely we bestow our time wel; there is nor quaint phrase, nor choise word, nor ambiguous figure, nor patheticall example, nor love-expressing gesture, nor alluring posture, but they know them all better then our bookes: It is a cunning bred in their vaines and will never out of the flesh,

Ladies'
skill in love

Et mentem Venus ipsa dedit.—VIRG. Georg. iii. 267.

Venus her selfe assign'de
To them both meanes and minde,

which these skill infusing Schoole-mistresses nature, youth, health and opportunitie, are ever buzzing in their eares, ever whispering in their minds: They need not learn, nor take paines about it; they beget it, with them it is borne.

*Nec tantum niveo gavisæ est nulla columbo
Compar, vel si quid dicitur improbius,
Oscula mordenti semper decerpere rostro:
Quantum præcipue multivola est mulier.*

—CATUL. Eleg. iv. 125.

Ordinances
for love

No pigeons hen, or paire, or what worse name
You list, makes with hir Snow-white cock such game.

With biting bill to catch when she is kist,
As many-minded women when they list.

Had not this naturall violence of their desires
beene somewhat held in awe, by feare and honor, wherewith they have beene provided, we had all beene defamed. All the worlds motions bend and yeeld to this conjunction, it is a matter everywhere infused; and a Centre whereto all lines come, all things looke. The ordinances of ancient and wise Rome, ordained for the service, and instituted for the behoofe of love, are yet to be seene: together with the precepts of Socrates to instruct courtizans.

Nec non libelli Stoici inter sericos Jacere pulvillos amant.—HOR. Epod. viii. 15.

Ev'n Stoicks books are pleas'd
Amidst silke cushions to be eas'd.

Zeno among other laws, ordered also the strug-
glings, the opening of legges, and the actions,
which happen in the deflowring of a virgin.
Of what sense was the book of Strato the Philosopher, of carnall copulation? And whereof treated Theophrastus in those he entitled, one The Lover, the other, Of Love?
Whereof Aristippus in his volume Of ancient deliciousnesse or sports? What implied or what imported the ample and lively descriptions in Plato, of the loves practised in his dayes?
And the lover of Demetrius Phalereus? And Clinias, or the forced lover of Heraclides Ponticus? And that of Antisthenes, of the getting of children, or of weddings? And the other, Of the Master, or of the lover? And that of Aristo Of amorous exercises? Of Cleanthes, one of love, another of the Art of love? The amorous dialogues of Spherus? And the filthy intolerable, and without blushing not to be uttered fable of Jupiter and Juno, written by Chrysippus? And his so lascivious fifty Epistles? I will omit the writings of some Philosophers, who have followed the sect of Epicurus, protectresse of all maner of sensuality and carnall pleasure. Fifty severall Deities were in times past allotted to this office. And there hath beene a nation found, which to allay and coole the lustfull concupiscence of such as came for devotion, kept wenches of purpose in their temples to be used; and it was a point of religion to deale with them before one went to prayers. Nimirum propter continentium incontinentia necessaria est, incendium ignibus extinguatur. Belike we must be incontinent that we may be continent, burning is quenched by fire. In most places of the world, that part of our body was deified. In that same province, some flead it to offer, and consecrated a peece thereof; others offred and consecrated their seed. In another the young men did publicly pierce, and in divers places open their yard between flesh and skin, and thorow the holes put the longest and biggest stickes they could endure, and of those stickes made afterward a fire, for an offering to their Gods, and were esteemed of small

Worship
of Venus

Worship of Priapus vigour and lesse chastity, if by the force of that cruell paine they shewed any dismay. Elsewhere, the most sacred magistrate was revered and acknowledged by those parts. And in divers ceremonies the portraiture thereof was carried and shewed in pompe and state, to the honour of sundry Deities. The Ægyptian Dames in their Bacchanalian feasts wore a wodden one about their necks, exquisitly fashioned, as huge and heavy as every one could conveniently beare: besides that which the statue of their God represented, which in measure exceeded the rest of his body. The married women here-by, with their Coverchefts frame the figure of one upon their forheads; to glory themselves with the enjoying they have of it; and comming to be widowes, they place it behind, and hide it under their quoifes. The greatest and wisest matrons of Rome, were honoured for offering flowers and garlands to God Priapus. And when their Virgins were married, they (during the nuptials) were made to sit upon their privities. Nor am I sure, whether in my time, I have not seene a glimps of like devotion. What meant that laughter-moving, and maids looke-drawing peece our Fathers wore in their breeches, yet extant among the Switzers? To what end is at this present day the shew of our formall peeces under our Gascoine hoses? and often (which is worse) above their naturall greatnesse, by falsehood and imposture? A little thing would make me believe, that the said kinde of garment was invented in the best and most upright ages, that the world might not be deceived, and all men should yeeld a publike account of their sufficiency. The simplest nations have it yet somewhat resembling the true forme. Then was the workemans skill instructed, how it is to be made, by the measure of the arme or foot. That good-meaning man, who in my youth, thorowout his great city, caused so many faire, curious and ancient statues to be guelded, lest the sense of seeing might be corrupted, following the advice of that other good ancient man,

Man at war with nature

Flagitii principium est nudare inter cives corpora :

—CIC. Tusc. iv. En.

Mongst civill people sinne,
By baring bodies we beginne,

should have considered, how in the mysteries of the good Goddesse, all apparance of man was excluded; that he was no whit neerer, if he did not also procure both horses and asses, and at length nature her selfe to be guelded.

*Omne adeo genus in terris, hominumque ferarumque,
Et genus æquoreum, pecudes, pictæque volucres,
In furias ignemque ruunt.*—VIRG. Georg. iii. 244.

All kindes of things on earth, wilde beast, man-kinde,
Field-beasts, faire-fethered fowle, and fish (we finde)
Into loves fire and fury run by kinde.

The Gods (saith Plato) have furnished man with a disobedient, skittish, and tyrannicall member; which like an untamed furious-beast, attempteth by the violence of his appetite to

Dangers
of ignorance bring all things under his becke. So have they allotted women another as insulting, wilde and fierce; in nature like a greedy, devouring, and rebellious creature, who if when he craveth it, hee bee refused nourishment, as impatient of delay, it enrageth; and infusing that rage into their bodies, stoppeth their conduits, hindreth their respiration, and causeth a thousand kindes of inconveniences; untill sucking up the fruit of the generall thirst, it have largely bedewed and enseeded the bottome of their matrix. Now my law-giver should also have considered, that peradventure it were a more chaste and commodiously fruitfull use, betimes to give them a knowledge and taste of the quicke; then according to the liberty and heat of their fantasie, suffer them to ghesse and imagine the same. In lieu of true essentiall parts, they by desire surmise, and by hope substitute others, three times as extravagant. And one of my acquaintance was spoiled, by making open shew of his in place, where yet it was not convenient to put them in possession of their more serious use. What harme cause not those huge draughts or pictures, which wanton youth with chalke or coales draw in each passage, wall, or staires of our great houses? whence a cruell contempt of our naturall store is bred in them. Who knoweth, whether Plato ordaining amongst other well-instituted Common-wealths, that men and women, old and yoong, should in their exercises or Gymnastickes, present themselves naked one to the sight of another, aimed at that or no? The Indian women, who daily without interdiction view their men all over, have at least where- with to assuage and coole the sense of their seeing. And whatsoever the women of that great kingdome of Pegu say, who from their waste downward, have nothing to cover themselves but a single cloth slit before; and that so straight, that what nice modestie, or ceremonious decencie soever they seeme to affect, one may plainly at each step see what God hath sent them: that it is an invention or shift devised to draw men unto them, and with-draw them from other men or boies, to which unnaturall brutish sinne that nation is wholly addicted: it might be said, they lose more then they get: and that a full hunger is more vehement, then one which hath beene glutted, be it but by the eyes. And Livia said, that to an honest woman, a naked man is no more then an Image. The Lacedemonian women, more virgin-wives, then are our maidens, saw every day the young men of their citie, naked at their exercises: themselves nothing precise to hide their thighs in walking, esteeming themselves (saith Plato) sufficiently cloathed with their vertue, without vardingall. But those, of whom S. Augustine speaketh, have attributed much to nakednesse, who made a question, whether women at the last day of judgement should rise againe in their proper sex, and not rather in ours, lest even then they tempt us in that holy state. In summe, we lure and every way flesh them: we uncessantly enflame and encite their imagination: and then we cry out,

Influence
of sight

Comparison of sins but oh, but oh the belly. Let us confesse the truth, there are few amongst us, that feare not more the shame they may have by their wives offences, then by their owne vices; or that cares not more (oh wondrous charity) for his wives, then his own conscience; or that had not rather be a theefe and church-robber, and have his wife a murderer and an heretike, then not more chaste then himselfe. Oh impious estimation of vices. Both wee and they are capable of a thousand more hurtfull and unnaturall corruptions, then is lust or lasciviousnesse. But we frame vices and waigh sinnes, not according to their nature, but according to our interest; whereby they take so many different unequal formes. The severity of our lawes makes womens inclination to that vice, more violent and faulty, then it's condition beareth; and engageth it to worse proceedings then is their cause. They will readily offer rather to follow the practise of law, and plead at the barre for a fee, or go to the warres for reputation, then in the midst of idlenesse and deliciousnesse be tied to keepe so hard a Sentinell, so dangerous a watch. See they not plainly, how there is neither Merchant, Lawyer, Souldier, or Church-man, but will leave his accounts, forsake his client, quit his glory, and neglect his function, to follow this other businesse? And the burden-bearing porter, souterly cobbler, and toilefull labourer, all harassed, all besmeared, and all bemoiled, through travell, labour and [trudging], will forget all, to please himselfe with this pleasing sport.

*Num tu quæ tenuit dives Achæmenes,
Aut pinguis Phrygiæ Mygdonias opes, Permutare velis crine Liciniæ,*

*Plenas aut Arabum domos,
Dum fragrantia detorquet ad oscula
Cervicem, aut facili sævitia negat,
Quæ poscente magis gaudeat eripi,*

Interdum rapere occupet?—HOR. Car. ii. Od. xii. 21.

The vow
of virginity

Would you exchange for your faire mistresse haire,
All that the rich Achæmenes did hold,
Or all that fertill Phrygiæ soile doth beare,
Or all th' Arabians store of spice and gold?
Whilst she to fragrant kisses turnes her head,
Or with a courteous coinesse them denies;
Which more then he that speeds she would have sped,
And which sometimes to snatch she formost hies?

I wot not whether Cæsars exploits, or Alexanders atchivements exceed in hardinesse the resolution of a beautilous young woman, trained after our manner, in the open view and uncontrolled conversation of the world, sollicitated and battered by so many contrary examples, exposed to a thousand assaults and continuall pursuits, and yet still holding her selfe good and unvanquished. There is no point of doing more thorny, nor more active, then this of not doing. I finde it easier, to beare all ones life a combersome armour on his backe, then a maiden-head. And the vow of virginity, is the noblest of all vowes, because the hardest. Diaboli virtus in lumbis est (HIERON.): The divels master-point lies in our loines, saith S. Jerome. Surely we have resigned the most difficult and vigorous devuire of mankinde unto women, and quit them the glory of it, which might stead them as a

The singular motive to opinionate themselves therein :
theory of and serve them as a worthy subject to brave us,
refusal and trample under feet that vaine preheminance
of valour and vertue we pretend over them.
They shall finde (if they but heed it) that they shall thereby not only be highly regarded,
but also more beloved. A gallant undaunted spirit leaveth not his pursuits for a bare refusall ; so it bee a refusall of chastitie, and not of choise. Wee may sweare, threaten and wail-ingly complaine ; we lie, for we love them the better. There is no enticing lure to wisdome and secret modestie ; so it be not rude, churlish, and froward. It is blockishnesse and basenesse to be obstinately willfull against hatred and contempt : But against a vertuous and constant resolution, matched with an acknowledging minde, it is the exercise of a noble and generous minde. They may accept of our service unto a certaine measure, and make us honestly perceive how they disdaine us not : for the law which enjoineth them to abhorre us, because we adore them ; and hate us, forsomuch as we love them : is doubtlesse very cruell, were it but for it's difficultie. Why may they not listen to our offers, and not gaine-say our requests, so long as they containe themselves within the bounds of modestie ? Wherefore should we imagine, they inwardly affect a freer meaning ? A Queene of our time said wittily, that to refuse mens kinde summons, is a testimony of much weaknesse, and an accusing of ones owne facility : and that an unattempted Lady could not vaunt of her chastitie.

Honours limits are not restrained so short: they may somewhat be slacked, and without offending somewhat dispensed withall. At the end of his frontiers, there is left a free, indifferent, and newter space. He that could drive and force his mistresse into a corner, and reduce her into her fort, hath no great matter in him, if he be not content with his fortune. The price or honor of the conquest is rated by the difficultie. Will you know what impression your merits, your services and worth have made in her heart? Judge of it by her behaviour and disposition.

Value
of the conquest

Some one may give more, that (all things considered) giveth not so much. The obligation of a benefit hath wholly reference unto the will of him that giveth: other circumstances which fall within the compasse of good-turnes, are dumbe, dead and casuall. That little she giveth may cost her more, then all her companion hath. If rarenesse be in any thing worthy estimation, it ought to be in this. Respect not how little it is, but how few have it to give. The value of money is changed according to the coine, stampe or marke of the place. Whatsoever the spight or indiscretion of some, may upon the excesse of their discontentment, make them say; Vertue and truth doe ever recover their advantage. I have knowen some, whose reputation hath long time beene impeached by wrong, and interested by reproach, restored unto all mens good opinion and generall approbation, without care or Art, onely by their constancie; each repenting and denying what he formerly beleaved. From

The infirmity of jealousy

wenches somewhat suspected, they now hold the first ranke amongst honourable Ladies. Some told Plato, that all the world spake ill of him; Let them say what they list (quoth hee) I will so live, that Ile make them recant and change their speeches. Besides the feare of God, and the reward of so rare a glory, which should incite them to preserve themselves, the corruption of our age enforceth them unto it: and were I in their clothes, there is nothing but I would rather doe, then commit my reputation into so dangerous hands. In my time, the pleasure of reporting and blabbing what one hath done (a pleasure not much short of the act it selfe in sweetnesse) was only allowed to such as had some assured, trustie and singular friend; whereas now-a-daies, the ordinary entertainements and familiar discourses of meetings and at tables, are the boastings of favours received, graces obtained, and secret liberalities of Ladies. Verily it is too great an abjection, and argueth a basenesse of heart, so fiercely to suffer those tender, daintie, delicious joyes, to be persecuted, pelted, and foraged by persons so ungratefull, so indiscreet, and so giddy-headed. This our immoderate and lawlesse exasperation against this vice, proceedeth and is bred of jealousy; the most vaine and turbulent infirmitie that may afflict mans minde.

*Quis vetat appposito lumen de lumine sumi?
Dent licet assidue, nil tamen inde perit.*

—OVID. Art. Amand. iii. 93.

To borrow light of light, who would deny?
Though still they give, nothing is lost thereby

That, and Envie her sister, are (in mine Envy and opinion) the fondest of the troupe. Of the jealousy latter, I cannot say much; a passion which how effectuall and powerfull soever they set forth; of her good favour she medleth not with me. As for the other, I know it only by sight. Beasts have some feeling of it. The shepheard Cratis being fallen in love with a shee Goat, her Bucke for jealousie beat out his braines as hee lay asleepe. Wee have raised to the highest straine the excesse of this moodie feaver, after the example of some barbarous nations: The best disciplined have therewith beene tainted, it is reason; but not carried away by it:

*Ense maritali nemo confossus adulter,
Purpureo stygias sanguine tinxit aquas.*

With husbands sword yet no adulter slaine,
With purple blood did Stygian waters staine.

Lucullus, Cæsar, Pompey, Anthony, Cato, and divers other gallant men were Cuckolds, and knew it, though they made no stirre about it. There was in all that time but one gullish coxcombe Lepidus, that died with the anguish of it.

*Ah tum te miserum malique fati,
Quem attractis pedibus patente porta, Percurrent mugisque raphanique.*

—CATUL. Lyr. Epig. xv. 17.

Ah thee then wretched, of accursed fate,
Whom Fish-wives, Redish-wives of base estate,
Shall scoffing over-runne in open gate.

And the God of our Poet, when he surprised

The loves of the gods one of his companions napping with his wife, was contented but to shame them :

*Atque aliquis de dis non tristibus optat,
Sic fieri turpis.*—OVID. Met. iv. 187.

Some of the merier Gods doth wish in heart,
To share their shame, of pleasure to take part.

And yet forbearth not to be enflamed with the gentle dalliances, and amorous blandishments she offereth him, complaining that for so slight a matter he should distrust her to him deare-deare affection :

*Quid causas petis ex alto? fiducia cessit
Quo tibi Diva mei?*—VIRG. Aen. viii. 395.

So farre why fetch you your pleas pedigree?
Whither is fled the trust you had in mee?

And which is more, she becomes a suiter to him in the behalfe of a bastard of hers.

Arma rogo genitrix nato.—Ibid. 382.

A mother for a sonne, I crave,
An armor he of you may have.

Which is freely granted her: And Vulcan speakes honourably of Æneas :

Arma acri facienda viro.—Ibid. 441.

An armour must be hammered out,
For one of courage sterne and stout.

In truth with an humanity, more then humane.
And which excesse of goodnesse by my consent shall onely be left to the Gods :

Nec divis hominis componier æquum est.

—CATUL. Eleg. iv. 141

Nor is it meet, that men with Gods
Should be compar'd, there is such ods.

Green-eyed jealousy

As for the confusion of children, besides that the gravest law-makers appoint and affect it in their Common-wealths, it concerneth not women, with whom this passion is, I wot not how in some sort better placed, fitter seated.

Sæpe etiam Juno maxima calicolum

Conjugis in culpa flagravit quotidiana.

—CATUL. Eleg. iv. 138.

Ev'n Juno chiefe of Goddesses oft-time,
Hath growne hot at her husbands daily crime.

When jealousie once seizeth on these silly, weake, and unresisting soules, 'tis pitifull, to see, how cruelly it tormenteth, insultingly it tyrannizeth them. It insinuateth it selfe under colour of friendship: but after it once possesseth them, the same causes which served for a ground of good-will, serve for the foundation of mortall hatred. Of all the mindes diseases, that is it, whereto most things serve for sustenance, and fewest for remedy. The vertue, courage, health, merit and reputation of their husbands, are the firebrands of their despight, and motives of their rage.

Nullæ sunt inimiciæ nisi amoris acerbæ.

—PROP. ii. El. viii. 3.

No enmities so bitter prove,
And sharpe, as those which spring of love.

This consuming feaver blemisheth and corrupteth all that otherwise is good and goodly in Love them. And how chaste or good a huswife so-turned to ever a jealous woman is, there is no action of hatred hers, but tasteth of sharpnesse and smaks of importunity. It is a furious perturbation, a moody agitation, which throwes them into extremities, altogether contrary to the cause. The successe of one Octavius in Rome was strange,

 who having layen with, and enjoied the love
 of Pontia Posthumia, increased his affection by enjoying her, and instantly sued to mary her;
 but being unable to perswade her, his extreme passionate love precipitated him into effects of a most cruell, mortall and inexorable hatred, whereupon he killed her. Likewise the ordinary Symptomes or passions of this other amorous disease, are intestine hates, slie Monopolies, close conspiracies :

Notumque, furens quid famina possit.

—VIRG. Aen. v. 6.

It is knowne what a woman may,
 Whose raging passions have no stay.

And a raging spight, which so much the more
 fretteth it selfe, by being forced to excuse it selfe under pretence of good-will. Now the duty of chastitie hath a large extension and farre-reaching compasse. Is it their will, we would have them to bridle? That's a part very pliable and active.
 It is very nimble and quick-rolling to bee staid.
 What? If dreames do sometimes engage them
 so farre, as they cannot dissemble nor deny them;
 It lieth not in them (nor perhaps in chastitie it selfe, seeing she is a female) to shield themselves

from concupiscence and avoid desiring. If only A time to love their will interesse and engage us, where and in what case are we? Imagine what great throng of men there would bee, in pursuit of this privilege, with winged-speed (though without eies and without tongue) to be conveied upon the point of every woman that would buy him. The Scythian women were wont to thrust out the eies of all their slaves and prisoners taken in warre, thereby to make more free and private use of them. Oh what a furious advantage is opportunitie! He that should demand of me, what the chiefe or first part in love is, I would answer, To know how to take fit time; even so the second, and likewise the third. It is a point which may doe all in all. I have often wanted fortune, but sometimes also enterprise. God shield him from harme, that can yet mocke himselfe with it. In this age more rashnesse is required; which our youths excuse under colour of heat. But should our women looke neerer unto it, they might finde, how it rather proceedeth of contempt. I superstitiously feared to offend; and what I love, I willingly respect. Besides that, who depriveth this merchandize of reverence, defaceth all luster of it. I love that a man should therein somewhat play the childe, the dastard and the servant. If not altogether in this, yet in some other things I have some aires or motives of the sottish bashfulnesse, whereof Plutarch speaketh; and the course of my life hath diversly beene wounded and tainted by it: a qualitie very ill beseeming my universall

Mon- forme. And what is there amongst us, but sedi- taigne tion and jarring? Mine eyes be as tender to tender beare a refusall as to refuse; and it doth so towards much trouble me to be troublesome to others,
 refusal that where occasions force me or dutie compelleth me to trie the will of any one, be it in doubtfull things, or of cost unto him, I do it but faintly and much against my will: But it
 it be for mine owne private businesse (though Homer say most truly, that in an indigent or needy man, bashfulnesse is but a fond vertue) I commonly substitute a third party, who may blush in my roome: and direct them that employ mee, with like difficulty: so that it hath sometimes befallen me, to have the will to deny, when I had not power to refuse. It is then folly, to go about to bridle women of a desire, so fervent and so naturall in them. And when I heare them bragge to have so virgin-like a will and cold mind, I but laugh and mocke at them.
 They recoile too farre backward. If it be a toothlesse beldame or decrepit grandame, or a young drie pthisicke starveling; if it be not altogether credible, they have at least some colour
 or apparence to say it. But those which stirre about, and have a little breath left them, marre
 but their market with such stufte: forsomuch
 as inconsiderate excuses are no better then accusa- tions. As a Gentleman my neighbour, who was suspected of insufficiencie,

*Languidior tenera cui pendens sicala beta,
 Nunquam se mediam sustulit ad tunicam,*

—CATUL. El. iii. 21.

to justifie himselfe, three or foure dayes after his mariage, swore confidently, that the night before, he had performed twenty courses: which oath hath since served to convince him of meere ignorance, and to divorce him from his wife. Besides, this allegation is of no great worth: For, there is nor continencie, nor vertue, where no resistance is to the contrary. It is true, may one say, but I am not ready to yeeld. The Saints themselves speake so. This is understood of such as boast in good earnest of their coldnesse and insensibility, and would be credited with a serious countenance: for, when it is from an affected looke (where the eyes give words the lie) and from the faltring speech of their profession (which ever workes against the wooll) I allow of it. I am a duteous servant unto plainnesse, simplicity and liberty: but there is no remedie, if it be not meerely plaine, simple or infantine; it is fond, inept and unseemely for Ladies in this commerce: it presently inclineth and bendeth to impudence. Their disguisings, their figures and dissimulations cozen none but fooles; their lying sitteth in the chaire of honour; it is a by-way, which by a false posterne leads us unto truth. If we cannot containe their imaginations, what require we of them? the effects? Many there be, who are free from all strangers-communication, by which chastitie may be corrupted, and honestie defiled.

No virtue
without trial

Illud sæpe facit, quod sine teste facit.

—MART. vii. Epig. lxi. 6.

What she doth with no witsnesse to it,
She often may be found to do it.

Extremes of chastity And those whom we feare least, are peradventure most to be feared : their secret sins are the worst.

Offendor mæcha simpliciore minus.

—Ibid. vi. Epig. vii. 6.

Pleas'd with a whores simplicity,
Offended with her nicitie.

There are effects, which without impuritie may lose them their pudicitie; and which is more, without their knowledge. Obstetrix virginis cujusdam integritatem manu velut explorans, sive malevolentia, sive inscitia, sive casu, dum inspicit, perdidit: A Midwife searching with her finger into a certaine maidens virginity, either for ill will, or of unskilfulnesse, or by chance, whilst shee seekes and lookes into it, shee lost and spoiled it. Some one hath lost or wronged her virginity in looking or searching for it; some other killed the same in playing with it. Wee are not able precisely to circumscribe them the actions we forbid them: Our law must be conceived under generall and uncertaine termes. The very Idea we forge unto their chastity is ridiculous. For, amongst the extremest examples or patternes I have of it, it is Fatua the wife of Faunas; who after shee was married, would never suffer her selfe to be seene of any man whatsoever. And Hierons wife, that never felt her husbands stinking breath, supposing it to be a quality common to all men. It were necessary, that to satisfie and please us, they should become insensible and invisible. Now let us confesse, that the knot of the judgement

of this duty consisteth principally in the will. Bartered
 There have beene husbands who have endured honour
 this accident, not only without reproach and offence against their wives, but with singular
 acknowledgement, obligation and commendation
 to their vertue. Some one that more esteemed her honestie then she loved her life, hath pros-tituted the same unto the lawlesse lust and raging sensuality of a mortall hatefull enemy, thereby to save her husbands life; and hath done that for him, which she could never have beene induced to do for her selfe. This is no place to extend these examples: they are too high
 and over-rich, to be presented in this luster:
 let us therefore reserve them for a nobler seat.
 But to give you some examples of a more vulgar stampe: Are there not women daily
 seene amongst us, who for the only profit of their husbands, and by their expresse order and brokage, make sale of their honesty? And in old times Phaulius the Argian, through ambition
 offred his to King Philip. Even as that Galba, who bestowed a supper on Mecenas, perceiving
 him and his wife beginne to bandy eie-trickes
 and signes, of civility shrunke downe upon his cushion, as one [oppressed] with sleepe; to give better scope unto their love; which he avouched
 as pretily: for at that instant, a servant of his presuming to lay hands on the plate which was on the table, he cried outright unto him; How now varlet? Seest thou not I sleepe only for Mecenas? One may be of a loose behaviour, yet of purer will and better reformed, then

Quis custodiet
ipsos custodes?

another who frameth her selfe to a precise apparance. As some are seene complaine because they vowed chastitie before yeeres of discretion or knowledge: so have I seene others unfainedly bewaile and truly lament that they were vowed to licentiousnesse and dissolutenes before the age of judgement and distinction. The parents leaudnesse may be the cause of it; or the force of impulsive necessity, which is a shrewd counsellor, and a violent perswader. Though chastity were in the East Indias of singular esteeme, yet the custome permitted, that a married wife might freely betake her selfe to what man soever did present her an Elephant: and that which some glory to have been valued at so high a rate. Phedon the Philosopher, of a noble house, after the taking of his country Elis, professed to prostitute the beauty of his youth to all commers, so long as it should continue, for money to live with and beare his charges. And Solon was the first of Grece (say some) who by his lawes, gave women liberty, by the price of their honestie, to provide for their necessities: A custome which Heroditus reporteth, to have beene entertained before him in divers Commonwealths. And moreover, what fruit yeelds this carefull vexation? For, what justice soever be in this passion, yet should we note whether it harrie us unto our profit or no. Thinkes any man that he can ring them by his industrie?

*Pone seram, cohibe; sed quis custodiet ipsos
Custodes? cauta est, et ab illis incipit uxor.*

—JUVEN. Sat. vi. 247.

Keepe her with locke and key: but from her who shall keepe
 Her Keepers? She begins with them, her wits so deepe.

Vicious curiosity

What advantage sufficeth them not, in this so skilfull age? *Curiosity is every where vicious ;
 but herein pernicious.* It is meere folly for one
 to seeke to be resolved of a doubt, or search
 into a mischief; for which there is no remedie,
 but makes it worse, but festereth the same: the reproach whereof is increased, and chiefly published by jealousie: and the revenge whereof doth more wound and disgrace our children,
 then it helpeth or graceth us. You waste away
 and die in pursuit of so concealed a mysterie, of so obscure a verification. Whereunto how pitiously have they arrived, who in my time have attained their purpose? If the accuser, or intelligencer present not withall the remedy and his assistance, his office is injurious, his intelligence harmefull, and which better deserveth a stabbe, then doth a lie. Wee flout him no lesse, that toileth to prevent it, then laugh at him that is a Cuckold and knowes it not. *The character of cuckoldrie is perpetuall ; on whom it once
 fastneth, it holdeth for ever.* The punishment bewraieith it more then the fault. It is a goodly sight, to draw our private misfortunes from out the shadow of oblivion or dungeon of doubt, for to blazon and proclaime them on Tragickall Stages: and misfortunes which pinch us not, but by relation. For (as the saying is) she is a good wife, and that a good mariage,

A frequent reproach not that is so indeed, but whereof no man speaketh. Wee ought to be wittily-wary to avoid this irksome, this tedious and unprofitable knowledge. The Romans were accustomed, when they returned from any journey, to send home before, and give their wives notice of their comming, that so they might not surprize them. And therefore hath a certaine nation instituted the Priest to open the way unto the Bride-groome, on the wedding day, thereby to take from him the doubt and curiosity of searching in this first attempt, whether shee come a pure virgin to him, or be broken and tainted with any former love. But the world speakes of it. I know a hundred Cockolds, which are so, honestly and little undecently. An honest man and a gallant spirit, is moaned, but not disesteemed by it. Cause your vertue to suppress your mishap; that honest-minded men may blame the occasion, and curse the cause; that he which offends you, may tremble with onely thinking of it. And moreover, what man is scot-free, or who is not spoken of in this sense, from the meanest unto the highest?

—*tot qui legionibus imperitavit,
Et melior quàm tu multis fuit, improbe, rebus.*

—LUCR. iii. 1070.

He that so many bands of men commanded,
Thy better much, sir knave, was much like branded.

Seest thou not how many honest men, even in thy presence, are spoken of and touched with this reproach? Imagine then they will be as bold with thee, and say as much of thee elsewhere. For no man is spared. And even Ladies will scoffe and prattle of it. And what do they now adaies more willingly flout at, then at any well composed and peaceable mariage? There is none of you all but hath made one Cuckold or other: Now nature stood ever on this point, Kae mee Ile kae thee, and ever ready to bee even alwaies on recompences and vicissitude of things, and to give as good as one brings. The long-continued frequency of this accident, should by this time have seasoned the bitter taste thereof: It is almost become a custome. Oh miserable passion, which hath also this mischiefe, to be incommunicable.

Fors etiam nostris invidit quæstibus aures.

—CATUL. her. Argon. 170.

Fortune ev'n eares envied,
To heare us when we cried.

For, to what friend dare you entrust your grievances, who, if hee laugh not at them, will not make use of them, as a direction and instruction to take a share of the quarie or bootie to himselfe? As well the sowrenesse and inconveniences, as the sweetnesse and pleasures incident to mariage, are secretly concealed by the wiser sort. And amongst other importunate conditions belonging to wedlocke, this one, unto a babling fellow as I am, is of the chiefest; that tyrannous custome makes it uncomely and hurtfull, for a man to communicate with any one all hee knowes and thinkes of it. To give

A scold- ing woman Their essence is so infected with suspicion, with vanity and curiosity, that we may not hope to cure them by any lawfull meane. They often recover of this infirmitie by a forme of health, much more to be feared, then the disease it selfe. For even as some inchantment cannot ridde away an evill, but with laying it on another, so when they lose it, they transferre and bestow this maladie on their husbands. And to say truth, I wot not whether a man can endure any thing at their hands worse then jealousie: of all their conditions it is most dangerous, as the head of all their members. Pittacus said, that every man had one imperfection or other: his wives curst pate was his; and but for that, he should esteeme himselfe most happy. It must needs be a weightie inconvenience, wherewith so just, so wise and worthy a man, felt the state of his whole life distempered: what shall wee pettie fellows doe then? The Senate of Marceille had reason to grant and enroll his request who demanded leave to kill himselfe, thereby to free and exempt himselfe from his wives tempestuous scolding humor, for it is an evill, that is never cleane rid away, but by removing the whole peece: and hath no other composition of worth, but flight or sufferance; both too-too hard, God knowes. And in my conceit, he understood it right, that said, a good mariage might be made betweene a blinde woman and a deafe man. Let us also take heed, lest this great and violent strictnesse of obligation we enjoin them, produce not two effects contrary to our end: that is to wit, to set an edge upon their suiters stomachs, and make women more easie to yeeld. For, as concerning the first point, enhancing the price of the place, we raise the price and endear the desire of the conquest. Might it not be Venus her selfe, who so cunningly enhanced the market of her ware, by the brokage or panderizing of the lawes? knowing how sottish and tastlesse a delight it is, were it not enabled by opinion, and endeared by dearnes? To conclude, it is all but hogges flesh, varied by sauce, as said Flaminius his hoast. Cupid is a roguish God; his sport is to wrestle with devotion and to contend with justice. It is his glory, that his power checketh and copes all other might, and that all other rules give place to his.

Materiam culpæ prosequiturque suæ.

—OVID. Trist. iv. El. i. 34.

He prosecutes the ground,
Where he is faulty found.

And as for the second point; should wee not be lesse Cuckolds if we lesse feared to be so? according to womens conditions: whom inhibition inciteth, and restraint inviteth.

Ubi velis nolunt, ubi nolis volunt ultro:

—TER. Eunuc. act. iv. sce. 6.

They will not when you will,
When you will not, they will.

Concessâ pudet ire viâ.—LUCAN. ii. 445.

They are asham'd to passe
The way that granted was.

The
deeds of Messa-
lina

What better interpretation can we finde concerning Messalinas demeanor? In the beginning she made her silly husband Cuckold, secretly and by stealth (as the fashion is) but perceiving how uncontrolled and easily she went on with her matches, by reason of the stupidity that possessed him, shee presently contemned and forsooke that course, and began openly to make love, to avouch her servants, to entertaine and favour them in open view of all men; and would have him take notice of it, and seeme to be distasted with it: but the silly gull and senselesse coxcombe awaked not for all this, and by his over-base facility, by which hee seemed to authorize and legitimate her humours, yeelding her pleasures weerish, and her amours tastelesse: what did shee? Being the wife of an Emperour, lustie, in health and living; and where? In Rome, on the worlds chiefe Theater, at high noone-day, at a stately feast, in a publike ceremonie; and which is more, with one Silius, whom long time before she had freely enjoied, she was solemnly married one day that her husband was out of the Citie. Seemes it not that shee tooke a direct course to become chaste, by the retchlesnesse of her husband? or that she sought another husband, who by jealousie might whet her appetite, and who insisting might incite her? But the first difficultie she met with, was also the last. The drowzie beast roused himselfe and suddenly started up. One bath often the worst bargaines at the hands of such sluggish logger heads. I have seene by experience, that this extreme patience or long-sufferance, if it once come to be dissolved, produceth most bitter and outrageous revenges: for, taking fire all at once, choller and fury hudling all together, becomming one confused chaos, clattereth foorth their violent effects at the first charge.

A sluggish
nature
roused

Irarumque omnes effundit habenas.

—VIRG. Aen. xii. 499.

It quite lets loose the raine,
That anger should restraine.

He caused both her and a great number of her instruments and abettors to be put to death; yea such as could not doe withall, and whom by force of whipping shee had allured to her adulterous bed. What Virgill saith of Venus and Vulcan, Lucretius had more sutable said it of a secretly-stolne enjoying betweene her and Mars.

—belli fera munera Mavors

Armipotens regit, in gremium qui sæpe tuum se

Reijcit, æterno devinctus vulnere amoris:

Pascit amore avidos inhians in te Dea visus,

Eque tuo pendet resupini spiritus ore:

Hunc tu Diva tuo recubantem corpore sancto

Circunfusa super, suaveis ex ore loquelas

Funde.—LUCRET. i. 33.

Mars mighty-arm'd, rules the fierce feats of armes,
Yet often casts himselfe into thine armes,
Oblig'd thereto by endlesse wounds of love,
Gaping on thee feeds greedy sight with love,
His breath hangs at thy mouth who upward lies;
Goddesse thou circling him, while he so lies,
With thy celestiall body, speeches sweet
Powre from thy mouth (as any Nectar sweet.)

Plain words When I consider this, reijcit, pascit, inhians, molli, fovet, medullas, labefacta, pendet, percurrit, and this noble circunfusa, mother of gentle infusus, I am vexed at these small points and verball allusions, which since have sprung up. To those well-meaning people, there needed no sharpe encounter or witty equivocation: Their speech is altogether full and massie, with a naturall and constant vigor: They are all epigram; not only taile, but head, stomacke and feet. There is nothing forced, nothing wrested, nothing limping; all marcheth with like tenour. Contextus totus virilis est, non sunt circa flosculos occupati. The whole composition or text is manly, they are not bebusied about Rhetorike flowers. This is not a soft quaint eloquence, and only without offence, it is sinnowie, materiall, and solid; not so much delighting, as filling and ravishing, and ravisheth most the strongest wits, the wittiest conceits. When I behold these gallant formes of expressing, so lively, so nimble, so deepe: I say not this is to speake well, but to think wel. It is the quaintnesse or livenessse of the conceit, that elevateth and puffes up the words. Pectus est quod disertum facit. It is a mans owne brest, that makes him eloquent. Our people terme judgement, language; and full conceptions, fine words. This pourtraiture is directed not so much by the hands dexterity, as by having the object more lively printed in the minde. Gallus speakes plainly, because he conceiveth plainly. Horace is not pleased with a sleight or superficiall expressing, it would betray him; he seeth more cleere and further into matters: his spirit pickes and ransaketh the whole store-house of words and figures, to shew and present himselfe; and he must have them more then ordinary, as his conceit is beyond ordinary. Plutarch saith, that he discerned the Latine tongue by things. Here likewise the sense enlightneth and produceth the words: no longer windy or spongy, but of flesh and bone. They signifie more then they utter. Even weake ones shew some image of this. For, in Italie, I spake what I listed in ordinary discourses, but in more serious and pithy, I durst not have dared to trust to an Idiome, which I could not winde or turne beyond it's common grace, or vulgar bias. I will be able to adde and use in it somewhat of mine owne. The managing and emploiment of good wits, endeareth and giveth grace unto a tongue: Not so much innovating as filling the same with more forcible and divers services, wresting, straining and enfolding it. They bring no words unto it, but enrich their owne, waigh-downe and cramme-in their signification and custome; teaching it unwonted motions; but wisely and ingenuously. Which skill how little it is given to all, may plainly bee discerned by most of our moderne French Writers. They are over-bold and scornefull, to shunne the common trodden path: but want of invention and lacke of discretion looseth them. There is nothing to be seene in them but a miserable strained affectation of strange Inke-pot termes; harsh, cold and absurd disguisements,

Choice
of words

The French language which in stead of raising, pull downe the matter. So they may gallantize and flush it in noveltie, they care not for efficacie. To take hold of a new farre-fetcht word, they neglect the usuall, which often are more significant, forcible and sinnowy. I finde sufficient store of stufte in our language, but some defect of fashion. For there is nothing but could be framed of our Hunters gibbrish words or strange phrases, and of our Warriours peculiar tearmes; a fruitfull and rich soile to borrow of. And as hearbes and trees are bettered and fortified by being transplanted, so formes of speach are embellished and graced by variation. I finde it sufficiently plenteous, but not sufficiently plyable and vigorous. It commonly faileth and shrinketh under a pithy and powerfull conception. If your march therein be far extended, you often feele it droope and languish under you, unto whose default the Latine doth now and then present his helping hand, and the Greeke to some others. By some of these words which I have culled out, we more hardly perceive the Energie or effectuall operation of them, forsomuch as use and frequencie have in some sort abased the grace and made their beauty vulgar. As in our ordinary language, we shall sometimes meete with excellent phrases, and quaint metaphors, whose blithenesse fadeth through age, and colour is tarnished by too common using them. But that doth nothing distaste those of sound judgement, nor derogate from the glory of those ancient Authors, who, as it is likely, were the first that brought these words into luster, and raised them to that straine. The Sciences handle this over finely, with an artificiall maner, and different from the vulgar and naturall forme. My Page makes love, and understands it feelingly; Read Leon Hebræus or Ficinus unto him; you speake of him, of his thoughts and of his actions, yet understands he nothing what you meane. I nor acknowledge nor discerne in Aristotle, the most part of my ordinary motions. They are clothed with other robes, and shrouded under other vestures, for the use of Academicall schooles. God send them well to speed: but were I of the trade, I would naturalize Arte, as much as they Artize nature. [There let us leave] Benbo and Equicola. When I write, I can well omit the company, and spare the remembrance of books; for feare they interrupt my forme. And in truth, good Authours deject me too-too much, and quaille my courage. I willingly imitate that Painter, who having bungler-like drawn, and fondly represented some Cockes, forbad his boies to suffer any live Cocke to come into his shop. And to give my selfe some luster or grace have rather neede of some of Antinonydes the Musicians invention; who when he was to play any musick, gave order that before or after him, some other bad musicians should cloy and surfet his auditory. But I can very hardly be without Plutark; he is so universall and so full, that upon all occasions, and whatsoever extravagant subject you have undertaken, he intrudeth himselfe into your work, and gently reacheth you a helpe-affording

The
words of Aristotle
and Plutarch

Montaigne
replies
to his
critics

hand, fraught with rare embelishments, and inexhaustible of precious riches. It spights me, that he is so much exposed unto the pillage of those which haunt him. He can no sooner come in my sight, or if I cast but a glance upon him, but I pull some legge or wing from him. For this my dissignement, it much fitteth my purpose, that I write in mine owne house, in a wild country, where no man helpeth or releeveth me; where I converse with no body that understands the Latine of his Pater noster and as little of French. I should no doubt have done it better else where, but then the worke had beene lesse mine: whose principall drift and perfection, is to be exactly mine; I could mend an accidentall errour, whereof I abound in mine unwary course; but it were a kinde of treason to remove the imperfections from me, which in me are ordinary and constant. When any body else, or my selfe have said unto my selfe: Thou art too full of figures or allegories; here is a word meerely-bred Gaskoyne; that's a dangerous phrase: (I refuse none that are used in the frequented streets of France; those that will combat use and custome by the strict rules of Grammar do but jest) there's an ignorant discourse, that's a paradoxicall relation: or there's a foolish conceit: thou doest often but dally: one will thinke thou speakest in earnest, what thou hast but spoken in jest. Yea (say I) but I correct unadvised, not customarie errors. Speake I not so every where? Doe I not lively display my selfe? that sufficeth: I have [my] will: All the world may know me by my booke, and my booke by me: But I am of an Apish and imitating condition. When I medled with making of verses (and I never made any but in Latine) they evidently accused the Poet I came last from reading: And of my first Essayes, some taste a little of the stranger. At Paris I speake somewhat otherwise then at Montaigne. Whom I behold with attention, doth easily convay and imprint something of his in me. What I heedily consider, the same I usurpe: a foolish countenance, a crabbed looke, a ridiculous manner of speach. And vices more: Because they pricke mee, they take fast hold upon mee, and leave mee not, unlesse I shake them off. I have more often beene heard to sweare by imitation, then by complexion. Oh injurious and dead-killing imitation: like that of those huge in greatnesse and matchlesse in strength Apes, which Alexander met withall in a certaine part of India: which otherwise it had beene hard to vanquish. But by this their inclination to counterfeit whatsoever they saw done, they afforded the meanes. For, thereby the Hunters learn't in their sight to put on shooes, and tie them with many strings and knots; to dresse their heads with divers strange attires, full of sliding-knots; and dissemblingly to rub their eyes with Glew, or Birde-lime. So did those silly harmelesse beasts indiscreetly employ their Apish disposition. They ensnared, glewed, entrameled, haltred and shackled themselves. That other faculty of Extempore and

His facility in imitation

Montaigne's
quickness
of mind

wittily representing the gestures and words of another, which often causeth sport and breedeth admiring, is no more in me then in a blocke. When I sweare after mine owne fashion, it is onely by God; the directest of all oathes. They report that Socrates swore by a Dogge; Zeno by that interjection (now a daies used amongst the Italies) Capari; and Pithagoras by water and by aire. I am so apt at unawares to entertaine these superficiall impressions, that if but for three daies together I use my selfe to speake to any Prince with your Grace or your Highnesse, for eight daies after I so forget my selfe, that I shall still use them for your Honour or your Worship: and what I am wont to speake in sport or jest the next day after I shall speake in good serious earnest. Therefore in writing I assume more unwillingly much beaten arguments, for feare I handle them at others charges. All arguments are alike fertile to me. I take them upon any trifle. And I pray God this were not undertaken by the commandement of a minde as fleeting. Let me begin with that likes me best, for all matters are linked one to another. But my conceit displeaseth me, for somuch as it commonly produceth most foolish dotages from deepest studies; and such as content me on a suddaine, and when I least looke for them; which as fast fleete away, wanting at that instant some holde fast. On horse backe, at the table, in my bed; but most on horse-backe, where my amplest meditations and my farthest reaching conceits are.

My speach is somewhat nicely jealous of attention and silence; if I be in any earnest talke, who interrupteth me, cuts me off. In travell, even the necessity of waies breakes off discourses. Besides that I most commonly travell without company, which is a great helpe for continued reasonings: whereby I have sufficient leasure to entertaine my selfe. I thereby have that successe I have in dreames: In dreaming I commend them to my memory (for what I dream I doe it willingly) but the next morning, I can well call to minde what colour they were of, whether blith, sad or strange: but what in substance, the more I labour to finde out, the more I overwhelme them in oblivion. So of casuall and unpremeditated conceits that come into my braine, nought but a vaine image of them remaineth in my memory: so much onely, as sufficeth unprofitably to make me chafe, spight and fret in pursuite of them. Well then, leaving bookes aside and speaking more materially and simply: when all is done: I finde that love is nothing else but an insatiate thirst of enjoying a greedily desired subject. Nor Venus that good huswife, other, then a tickling delight of emptying ones seminary vessels: as is the pleasure which nature giveth us to discharge other parts: which becommeth faulty by immoderation, and defective by indiscretion. To Socrates, love is an appetite of generation by the mediation of beauty. Now considering oftentimes the ridiculous tickling, or titilation of this pleasure, the absurd, giddy and hare-braind motions wherwith it tosseth

and his thoughts
on horseback and in dreams

'No bar-
rell better
Hering'

Zeno, and agitates Cratippus: that unadvised rage, that furious and with cruelty enflamed visage in loves lustfull and sweetest effects: and then a grave, sterne, severe, surly countenance in so fond-fond an action, that one hath pell-mell lodged our joyes and filthes together, and that the supremest voluptuousnesse both ravisheth and plaineth, as doth sorrow: I beleeve that which Plato saies to be true, that man was made by the Gods for them to toy and play withall.

—quænam ista jocandi Sævitia?

What cruelty is this, so set on jesting is?

And that Nature in mockery left us the most troublesome of our actions, the most common: thereby to equall us, and without distinction to set the foolish and the wise, us and beasts all in one ranke: no barrell better Hering. When I imagine the most contemplative and discreetly-wise-men in these tearmes in that humour, I hold him for a cozoner, for a cheater to seeme either studiously contemplative, or discreetly wise. It is the foulennesse of the Peacockes feete, which doth abate his pride, and stoope his gloating-eyed taylor;

—ridentem dicere verum,

Quid vetat?—HOR. Ser. i. Sat. ii. 24.

What should forbid thee sooth to say, yet be as merry as we may.

Those which in playes refuse serious opinions, doe as one reporteth, like unto him who dreadeth to adore the image of a Saint, if it want a cover, an aprone or a tabernacle. We feed full well, and drinke like beasts; but they are not actions that hinder the offices of our mind. In those, we hold good our advantage over them: whereas this brings each other thought under subjection, and by it's imperious authority makes brutish and dulleth all Platoes philosophy and divinity: and yet he complaines not of it. In al other things you may observe decorum and maintaine some decency: all other operations admit some rules of honesty: this cannot onely be imagined, but vicious or ridiculous. See whether for example sake, you can but find a wise or discreete proceeding in it. Alexander said, that he knew himselfe mortall chiefly by this action, and by sleeping: sleepe doth stifle, and suppresseth the faculties of our soule: and that both [devoureth] and dissipates them. Surely it is an argument not onely of our originall corruption, but a badge of our vanity and deformity. On the one side nature urgeth us unto it: having thereunto combined, yea fastned, the most noble, the most profitable, and the most sensually-pleasing, of all her functions: and on the other suffereth us to accuse, to condemne and to shunne it, as insolent, as dishonest, and as lewder to blush at it, and allow, yea and to commend abstinence. Are not we most brutish, to terme that worke beastly which begets, and which maketh us? Most people have concurred in divers ceremonies of religion, as sacrifices, luminaries, fastings, incensings, offerings: and amongst others, in condemning of this action. All opinions agree in that, besides

Honi soit
qui mal
y pense

The beginning
and end
of life

the so farre-extended use of circumcision. Wee have peradventure reason to blame our selves, for making so foolish a production as man, and to entitle both the deeds and parts thereto belonging, shamefull (mine are properly so at this instant). The Esseniens, of whom Plinie speaketh, maintained themselves a long time without nurces, or swathling clothes, by the arrival of strangers that came to their shoares, who seconding their fond humor, did often visit them. A whole nation hazarding rather to consume, then engage themselves to feminine embracements: and rather lose the succession of all men, then forge one. They report that Zeno never dealt with woman but once in all his life: which he did for civility, least he should over obstinately seeme to contemne the sex. Each one avoideth to see a man borne, but all runne hastily to see him dye. To destroy him we seek a spacious field and a full light: but to construct him, we hide our selves in some dark corner, and worke as close as we may. It is our dutie to conceale our selves in making him: it is our glory, and the originall of many vertues to destroy him, being framed. The one is a manifest injury, the other a greater favor: for Aristotle saith, that in a certaine phrase, where he was borne, to bonifie or benefit, was as much to say as to kill one. The Athenians, to equall the disgrace of these two actions, being to cleanse the Ile of Delos, and justifie themselves unto Apollo, forbad within that precinct all buriall and births. Nostri nosmet pœnitent (TER. Phor.), We are weary of our selves. There are some nations that when they are eating, they cover themselves. I know a Lady (yea one of the greatest) who is of opinion that to chew is an unseemly thing, which much empaireth their grace and beauty : and therefore by hir will she never comes abroad with an appetite. And a man that cannot endure one should see him eate, and shunneth all company more when he filleth, then when he emptieth himselfe. In the Turkish Empire there are many, who to excell the rest, will not be seene when they are feeding, and who make but one meale in a weeke : who mangle their faces and cut their limmes : and who never speake to any body, who think to honour their nature, by disnaturing themselves : oh [fanaticall] people, that prize themselves by their contempt, and mend [by] their empairing. What monstrous beast is this that maks himselfe a horror to himselfe, whom his delights displease, who tyes himselfe unto misfortune ? some there are that conceale their life,

Ingenuity
in self-vexation

Exilioque domos et aulcia limina mutant.

—VIRG. Geor. ii. 511.

They change for banishment, The places that might best content.

and steale it from the sight of other men : That eschew health, and shunne mirth as hatefull qualities and harmefull. Not onely divers Sects, but many people curse their birth and blesse their death. Some there be that abhorre the glorious Sunne, and adore the hidious darkenesse. We are not ingenious but to our own vexation : It

Creators is the true foode of our spirits force: a dangerous of misery and most unruly implement.

O miseri quorum gaudia crimen habent.

—COR. GAL. El. i. 188.

O miserable they, whose joyes in fault we lay.

Alas poore silly man, thou hast but too-too many necessary and unavoidable incommodities, without increasing them by thine owne invention, and art sufficiently wretched of condition without any arte: thou aboundest in reall and essentiall deformities, and needest not forge any by imagination. Doest thou find thy selfe too well at ease, unlesse the moity of thine ease molest thee? Findest thou to have supplied or discharged al necessary offices, wherto nature engageth thee, and that she is idle in thee, if thou binde not thy selfe unto new offices? thou fearest not to offend hir universall and undoubted lawes, and art mooved at thine owne partiall and fantastick ones. And by how much more particular, uncertaine, and contradicted they are, the more endeavours thou bestowest that way. The positive orders of thy parish tie thee, those of the world do nothing concerne thee. Runne but a little over the examples of this consideration; thy life is full of them. The verses of these two Poets, handling lasciviousnesse so sparingly and so discreetly, as they do, in my conceit seeme to discover, and display it nearer; ladies cover their bosome with networke; priests many sacred things with a vaile, and painters shadow their workes, to give them the more luster, and to adde more grace unto them. And they say that the streakes of the Sunne, and force of the winde, are much more violent by reflection, then by a direct line. The Egyptian answered him wisely, that asked him, what he had hidden under his cloake? it is (quoth he) hidden under my cloake, that thou maiest not know what it is. But there are certaine other things which men con-ceale to shew them. Here this fellow more open.

The half
is greater than the whole

Et nudam pressi corpus adusque meum.

—OVID. Am. i. El. v. 24.

My body I applide, Even to her naked side.

Me thinkes he baffles me. Let Martiall at his pleasure tuck-up Venus, he makes her not by much appeare so wholly. He that speakes all he knows, doth cloy and distaste us. Who feareth to expresse himselfe, leadeth our conceite to imagine more then happily he conceiveth. There is treason in this kind of modesty: and chiefly as these do, in opening us so faire a path unto imagination: Both the action and description should taste of purloyning. The love of the Spaniards, and of the Italians pleaseth me: by how much more respective and fearefull it is, the more nicely close and closely nice it is, I wot not who in ancient time wished his throat were as long as a Cranes neck, that so hee might the longer and more leasurely taste what he swallowed. That wish were more to purpose then this suddaine and violent pleasure: Namely in such natures as mine, who am faulty in suddainenesse. To stay her fleeting, and delay her with preambles, with

Lingering
sweetness

them all serveth for favour, all is construed to be a recompence, a wink, a cast of the eye, a bowing, a word, or a signe, a becke is as good as a Dew guard. Hee that could dine with the smoake of roste-meat, might he not dine at a cheape rate? would he not soone bee rich? It is a passion that commixeth with small store of solide essence, great quantity of doating vanity, and febricitant raving: it must therefore be requited and served with the like. Let us teach Ladies, to know how to prevaile; highly to esteeme themselves; to amuse, to circumvent and cozen us. We make our last charge the first: we shew our selves right French men: ever rash, ever headlong. Wire-drawing their favours, and enstalling them by retaile: each one, even unto miserable old age, findes some listes end, according to his worth and merite. He who hath no jovissance but in enjoying; who shootes not but to hit the marke; who loves not hunting but for the prey; it belongs not to him to entermedle with our Schoole. The more steps and degrees there are: the more delight and honour is there on the top. We should bee pleased to bee brought unto it, as unto stately Pallaces, by divers porches severall passages, long and pleasant Galleries, and well contrived turnings. This dispensation would in the end, redound to our benefite; we should stay on it, and longer love to lie at Racke and Manger; for these snatches and away, marre the grace of it. Take away hope and desire, we grow faint in our courses, we come but lagging after: Our mastery and absolute possession, is infinitely to bee feared of them: After they have wholly yeelded themselves to the mercy of our faith and constancy, they have hazarded something: They are rare and difficult vertues: so soone as they are ours, we are no longer theirs.

Things
good for Ladies

—*postquam cupidæ mentis satiata libido est.
Verba nihil metuere, nihil perjuriam curant.*

—CATUL. Arg. v. 147.

The lust of greedy minde once satisfied,
They feare no words; nor reke othes falsified,

And Thrasonides a young Grecian, was so religiously amorous of his love, that having after much sute gained his mistris hart and favour, he [refused] to enjoy hir, least by that jovissance he might or quench, or satisfie, or languish that burning flame and restlesse heat wherwith he gloried, and so pleasingly fed himselfe. Things farre fetcht and dearly bought are good for Ladies. It is the deare price makes viands savour the better. See but how the forme of salutations, which is peculiar unto our nation, doth by it's facility bastardize the grace of kisses, which Socrates saith, to be of that consequence, waight and danger, to ravish and steale our hearts. It is an displeasing and injurious custome unto Ladies, that they must afford their lips to any man that hath but three Lackies following him, how unhandsome and lothsome soever he be :

*Cujus livida naribus caninis,
Dependet glacies, rigetque barba:
Centum occurrere malo culilingis.*

—MART. v. Epig. xciv. 10.

Love of the body

From whose dog-nosthrils black blew Ise depends,
 Whose beard frost-hardned stands on bristled
 ends, etc.

Nor do we our selves gaine much by it: for as the world is divided into foure parts, so for foure faire ones, we must kisse fiftie foule: and to a nice or tender stomack, as are those of mine age, one ill kisse doth surpay one good. In Italy they are passionate and languishing sutors to very common and mercinarie women; and thus they defend and excuse themselves, saying; That even in enjoying there be certaine degrees; and that by humble services, they will endeavour to obtaine that, which is the most absolutely perfect. They sell but their bodyes, their willes cannot be put to sale; that is too free, and too much it's owne. So say these, that it is the will they attempt, and they have reason: It is the will one must serve and most sollicite. I abhor to imagine mine, a body voide of affection. And me seemeth, this frenzie hath some affinity with that boyes fond humor, who for pure love would wantonize with that fayre Image of Venus, which Praxiteles had made: or of that furious Ægyptian, who lusted after a dead womans corpes which he was embaulming and stitching up: which was the occasion of the lawe that afterward was made in Ægypt: that the bodies of faire, young and nobly borne women, should be kept three dayes, before they should be delivered into the hands of those who had the charge to provide for their funerals and burials.

Periander did more miraculously: who extended his conjugall affection (more regular and lawfull) unto the enjoying of Melissa his deceased wife. Seemes it not to be a lunatique humor in the Moone, being otherwise unable to enjoy Endimion hir favorite darling, to lull him in a sweete slumber for many moneths together; and feed himselfe with the jovissance of a boye, that stirred not but in a dreame? I say likewise, that a man loveth a body without a soule, when he loveth a body without his consent and desire. All enjoyings are not alike. There are some hecticke, faint and languishing ones. A thousand causes, besides affection and good will, may obtaine us this graunt of women. It is no sufficient testimony of true affection: therein may lurke treason, at else-where: they sometime goe but faintly to worke, and as they say with one buttocke;

Tanquam thura merumque parent;

—Ibid. xi. Epi. civ. 12.

As though they did dispense,
Pure Wine and Frankincense.

Absentem marmoreámve putes.—Ibid. Epig. lxi. 8.

Of Marble you would thinke she were,
Or that she were not present there.

I knowe some, that would rather lend that, then their coach; and who empart not themselves, but that way: you must also marke whether your company pleaseth them for some other respect, or for that end onely, as of a lustie-strong grome of a Stable: as also in what rank, and at what rate you are there lodged or valued;

Italian
women—tibi si datur uniQuo lapide illa diem candidiore notet.—CATUL. Eleg. iv. 147.

If it afforded be to thee alone,
Whereby she counts that day of all dayes one.

What if she eate your bread, with the sauce of a more pleasing imagination?

Te tenet, absentes alios suspirat amores.—TIBUL. iv. El. v. 11.

Thee she retaines, yet sigheth she
For other loves that absent be.

What? have we not seene some in our dayes, to have made use of this action, for the execution of a most horrible revenge, by that meanes murdering and empoysoning (as one did) a very honest woman? such as know Italie will never wonder, if for this subject, I seeke for no examples else-where. For the said nation may in that point be termed Regent of the world. They have commonly more faire women, and fewer foule then we; but in rare and excellent beauties I thinke we match them. The like I judge of their wits; of the vulgar sort they have evidently many more. Blockishnes is without all comparison more rare amongst them: but for singular wits, and of the highest pitch, we are no whit behinde them. Were I to extend this comparison, I might (me thinkes) say, touching valor, that on the other-side, it is in regard of them popular and naturall amongst us: but in their hands one may sometimes finde it so compleate and vigorous, that it exceedeth all the most forcible examples we have of it. The mariages of that countrie are in this somewhat defective. Their custome doth generally impose so severe observances, and slavish lawes upon wives, that the remotest acquaintance with a stranger, is amongst them as capitall as the nearest. Which law causeth, that all approaches prove necessarily substanciall: and seeing all commeth to one reckoning with them, they have an easie choise: and have they broken downe their hedges? Beleeve it, they will have fire: Luxuria ipsi vinculis, sicut fera bestia, irritata, deinde emissa: Luxurie is like a wild beast, first made fiercer with tying, and then let loose. They must have the reynes given them a little. A tight rein

*Vide ego nuper equum contra sua frena tenacem
Ore reluctanti fulminis ire modo.*

—OVID. Am. iii. El. iv. 13.

I saw, spite of his bit, a resty colt,
Runne head-strong headlong like a thunder-bolt.

They allay the desire of company, by giving it some liberty. It is a commendable custome with our nation, that our children are entertained in noble houses there, as in a schoole of nobility to be trained and brought up as Pages. And 'tis said to be a kinde of discourtesie, to refuse it a gentleman. I have observed (for, so many houses so many severall formes and orders) that such Ladies as have gone about to give their waiting women, the most austere rules, have not had the best successe. There is required more then ordinary moderation: a great part of their government

The highest virtue arises from freedom must bee left to the conduct of their discretion : For, when all comes to all no discipline can bridle them in each point. True it is, that she who escapeth safe and unpolluted from out the schoole of fredome, giveth more confidence of hirselve, then she who commeth sound out of the schoole of severity and restraint. Our forefathers framed their daughters countenances unto shamefastnesse and feare, (their inclinations and desires alwaies alike) we unto assurance. We understand not the matter. That belongeth to the Sarmatian wenches, who by their lawes may lie with no man, except with their owne hands they have before killed another man in warre. To me that have no right but by the eares, it sufficeth, if they retaine me to be of their counsell, following the priviledge of mine age : I then advise both them and us to embrace abstinence, but if this season bee too much against it, at least modestie and discretion. For, as Aristippus (speaking to some young men who blushed to see him go into a bawdy house) said, the fault was not in entring, but in not comming out again, She that will not exempt hir conscience, let hir exempt hir name : though the substance bee not of worth, yet let the apparance hould still good. I love gradation and prolonging, in the distribution of their favours. Plato sheweth, that in all kinds of love, facility and readinesse is forbidden to defendants. T'is a trick of greedinesse, which it behoveth them to cloake with their arte, so rashly and fond-hardily to yeeld themselves in grosse. In their distributions of favours, holding a regular and moderate course, they much better deceive our desires, and conceale theirs. Let them ever be flying before us: I meane even those that intend to bee overtaken. As the Scithians are wont, though they seeme to runne away, they beate us more, and sooner put us to route. Verily according to the lawe which nature giveth them, it is not fit for them to will and desire: their partis to beare, to obay and to consent. Therefore hath nature bestowed a perpetuall capacity; on us a seld and uncertaine ability. They have alwayes their houre, that they may ever be ready to let us enter. And whereas she hath willed our appetites should make apparant shew and declaration, she caused theirs to bee concealed and inward: and hath furnished them with parts unfit for ostentation; and onely for defence. Such pranks as this, we must leave to the Amazonian liberty. Alexander the great marching through Hircania, Thalestris Queen of the Amazones came to meet him with thre hundred ladies of her sex, all well mounted and completely armed; having left the residue of a great armie, that followed hir, beyond the neighbouring mountaines. And thus aloud, that all might heare she bespake him; That the farresounding fame of his victories, and matchles valour, had brought hir thither to see him, and to offer him hir meanes and forces, for the advancing and furthering of his enterprises. And finding him so faire, so young and strong, she, who was perfectly accomplished in all his woman's part

The

Love as a passion qualities, advised him to lye with hir that so there might be borne of the most valiant woman in the world, and only valiant man then living, some great and rare creature for posterity. Alexander thanked hir for the rest, but to take leasure for hir last demands accomplishment, he staide thirteene daies in that place, during which, he revelled with as much glee, and feasted with as great jollity as possibly could be devised, in honour and favour of so courageous a Princess. Wee are well-nigh in all things parcial and corrupted Judges of their action, as no doubt they are of ours. I allow of truth as well when it hurts me, as when it helps me. It is a foule disorder, that so often urgeth them unto change, and hinders them from setling their affection on any one subject: as wee see in this Goddesse, to whom they impute so many changes and severall friends. But withall it is against the nature of love, not to be violent, and against the condition of violence, to be constant. And those who wonder at it, exclaime against it, and in women search for the causes of this infirmity, as incredible and unnaturall: why see they not how often, without any amazement and exclaiming, themselves are possessed and infected with it? [It] might happily seeme more strange to find any constant stay in them. It is not a passion meerely corporeall. If no end be found in coveteousnesse, nor limit in ambition, assure your selfe there is nor end nor limit in letchery. It yet continueth after satiety: nor can any man prescribe it or end or constant satisfaction: it ever goeth on beyond it's possession, beyond it's bounds. And if constancy be peradventure in some sort more pardonable in them then in us: They may readily alleage against us, our ready inclination unto daily variety and new ware: And secondly alleage without us, that they buy a pigge in a poake. Jone Queen of Naples caused Andreosse her first husband to be strangled and hang'd out of the barres of his window, with a corde of Silke and golde woven with her owne hands; because in bed businesse she found neither his members nor endeavours answerable the hope shee had conceived of him, by viewing his stature, beauty, youth, and disposition, by which she had formerly beene surprised and abused. That action hath in it more violence then passion: so that on their part at least necessity is ever provided for: on our behalfe it may happen otherwise. Therefore Plato by his lawes did very wisely establish, that before marriages the better to decide it's opportunity, competent Judges might be appointed to take view of yong men which pretended the same, all naked: and of maidens but to the waste: in making triall of us, they happily find us not worthy their choise:

Experta latus, madidoque simillima loro

Inguina, nec lassa stare coacta manu

Deserit imbelles thalamos.—MARTI. vii. Epig. lvii. 3.

It is not sufficient, that will keepe a lively course: weakenesse and incapacity may lawfully breake wedlock;

Is it not enough to be miserable

Et quærendum aliunde foret nervosius illud

Quod posset Zonam solvere virgineam.

—CATUL. Eleg. iii. 27.

Why not, and according to measure, an amorous intelligence, more licentious and more active?

Si blando nequeat superesse labori.

—VIRG. Geor. iii. 127.

If it cannot out last, labor with pleasure past.

But is it not great impudency, to bring our imperfections and weakenesse, in place where we desire to please, and leave a good report and commendation behind us? for the little I now stand in need of,

—ad unum

Mollis opus.

Unable to hold out, one onely busie bout.

I would not importune any one, whom I am to reverence [and feare].

—fuge suspicari,

Cujus undenum trepidavit ætas

Claudere lustrum.—HOR. Car. ii. Od. iv. 22.

Him of suspition cleare,
Whom age hath brought well neare
To five and fifty yeare.

Nature should have beene pleased to have made this age miserable, without making it also ridiculous. I hate to see one for an inch of wretched vigor, which enflames him but thrice a week, take-on and swagger as fiercely, as if he hath some great and lawfull dayes-worke in his belly : without a right blast or puffe of winde : And admire his being itching, so quick and nimble, all in a moment also ridi-to be lubberly squat and benumbed. This culous ?

 appetite should only belong to the blossom of a prime youth. Trust not unto it, thogh you see it second that indefatigable, full, constant and swelling heate, that is in you : for truly it will leave you at the best, and when you shall most stand in neede of it. Send it rather to some tender, irresolute and ignorant girle, which yet trembleth for feare of the rod, and that will blush at it,

*Indum sanguineo veluti violaverit ostro,
 Si quis ebur, vel mista rubent ubi lilia, multa
 Alba rosa.*—VIRG. Aen. xii. 67.

As if the Indian Yvory one should taint,
 With bloody Scarlet-graine, or Lillies paint,
 White entermixt with red with Roses enter-spred.

Who can stay untill the next morrow, and not die for shame, the disdaine of those love sparkling eyes, privie to his faintnesse, dastardise and impertinencie ;

Et taciti fecere tamen convitia vultus.

—OVID. Am. i. El. vii. 21.

The face though silent, yet silent upbraydes-it ;

he never felt the sweet contentment, and the sense-mooving earnestnes, to have beaten and tarnished them by the vigorous exercise of an officious and active night. When I have perceived any of them weary of me, I have not presently accused her lightnes : but made question

The whether I had not more reason to quarrell with whole nature, for handling me so unlawfully and un-
man man civilly,

Si non longa satis, si non benè mentula crassa :

Nimirum sapiunt videntque parvam

Matronæ quoque mentulam illibenter,

—LUS. PRIAP. penul. 1; ib. viii. 4.

and to my exceeding hurt. Each of my pieces are equally mine, one as another : and no other doth more properly make me a man then this. My whole pourtraiture I universally owe unto the world. The wisdom and reach of my lesson, is all in truth, in liberty, in essence : Disdaining in the catalogue of my true duties, these easie, faint, ordinary and provincially rules. All naturall ; constant and generall ; whereof civility and ceremonie, are daughters, but bastards. We shall easily have the vices of apparance, when we shall have had those of essence. When we have done with these, we run upon others, if we finde need of running. For there is danger, that we devise new offices, to excuse our negligence toward naturall offices, and to confound them. That it is so, we see that in places where faults are bewitchings, bewitchings are but faults. That among nations, where lawes of seemelinsse are more rare and slacke, the primitive lawes of common reason are better observed : The innumerable multitude of so manifold duties, stifling, languishing and dispersing our care. The applying of our selves unto sleight matters, with-draweth us from such as be just. Oh how easie and plausible a course do these superficial men undertake, in respect of ours. These are but shadowes under which we shroud, and wherewith we pay one another. But we pay not, but rather heape debt on debt, unto that great and dreadfull judge, who tucks up our clouts and rags from about our privie parts, and is not squeamish to view all over, even to our most inward and secret deformities: a beneficiall decencie of our maidenly bashfulness, could it debar him of this tainted discovery. To conclude, he that could recover or un-besot man, from so scrupulous and verball a superstition, should not much prejudice the world. Our life consisteth partly in folly, and partly in wisdom. Hee that writes of it but reverently and regularly, omits the better moitie of it. I excuse me not unto my selfe, and if I did, I would rather excuse my excuses, then any fault else of mine: I excuse my selfe of certaine humors, which in number I hold stronger, then those which are on my side: In consideration of which I will say thus much more (for I desire to please all men; though it be a hard matter, Esse unum hominem accommodatum ad tantam morum, ac sermonum et voluntatum varietatem, That one man should be applyable to so great variety of manners, speeches and dispositions) that they are not to blame me, for what I cause auctorities received and approved of many ages, to utter: and that it is not reason, they should for want of ryme deny me the dispensation, which ever some of our churchmen usurpe and enjoy in this season; whereof

Folly and wisdom
of life

Mon- behold here two, and of the most pert and taigne's cocket amongst them:

excuse
for this essay

Rimula dispeream, ni monogramma tua est.

Un vit d'amy la contente et bien traicte.

How many others more? I love modestie; nor is it from judgement that I have made choise of this kinde of scandalous speech; t'is nature hath chosen the same for me: I commend it no more, then all formes contrary unto received custome: onely I excuse it; and by circumstances aswell generall as particular, would qualifie the imputation. Well, let us proceed. Whence commeth also the usurpation of soveraigne aucturity, which you assume unto your selves, over those that favour you to their cost and prejudice,

Si furtiva dedit nigra munuscula nocte.

—CATUL. El. iv 145.

If she have giv'n by night, 'The stolne gift of delight.

that you should immediatly invest withall the interest, the coldnes, and a wedlock authority? It is a free bargaine, why do you not undertake it on those termes you would have them to keepe? There is no prescription upon voluntarie things. It is against forme, yet it is true, that I have in my time managed this match (so farre as the nature of it would allow) with as much conscience as any other whatsoever, and not without some colour of justice: and have given them no further testimony of mine affection, then I sincerely felt: and have lively displaide unto them

the declination, vigor and birth of the same; with the fits and deferring of it: A man cannot He alwayes keepe an even pace, nor ever go to it alike. demon-
 I have bin so sparing to promise, that (as I thinke) strates
 I have paid more then either I promised or was his fide-
 due. They have found mee faithfull, even to lity
 the service of their inconstancy: I say an inconstancy avowed, and sometimes multiplied.
 I never broke with them, as long as I had any hold, were it but by a threds-end: and whatsoever occasion they have given me by their ficklenes, I never fell off unto contempt and hatred: for such familiarities, though I attaine them on most shamefull conditions, yet do they bind me unto some constant good-will. I have sometime given them a taste of choller and indiscret impatience, upon occasions of their wiles, sleights, close-conveyances, controversies and contestations betweene us: for, by complexion,
 I am subject to hastie and rash motions, which often empeach my traffick, and marre my bar-gaines, though but meane and of small worth.
 Have they desired to essay the liberty of my judgement, I never dissembled to give them
 fatherly counsell and biting advise, and shewed
 my selfe ready to scratch them where they itched. If I have given them cause to complaine of me, it hath bin most for finding a love in me, in respect of our moderne fashion, foolishly
 conscientious. I have religiously kept my word, in things, that I might easily have bin dispensed with. They then yeelded sometimes with reputation, and under conditions, which they would Montaigne's

care for his lovers'
interests

easily suffer to be infringed by the conqueror. I have more then once, made pleasure in hir greatest efforts strike saile unto the interest of their honor: and where reason urged me, armed them against me, so that they guided themselves more safely and severely by my prescriptions, if they once freely yeelded unto them, then they could have done by their owne. I have as much as I could endeavored to take on my selfe the charge and hazard of our appointments, therby to discharge them from all imputation; and ever contrived our meetings in most hard, strange and unsuspected manner, to be the lesse mistrusted, and (in my seeming) the more accessible. They are opened, especially in those parts, where they suppose themselves most concealed. Things lest feared are lest defended and observed. You may more securely dare, what no man thinks you would dare, which by difficulty becometh easie. Never had man his approaches more impertinently genitale. This way to love, is more according to discipline. But how ridiculous unto our people, and of how small effect, who better knowes then I? yet will I not repent me of it; I have no more to lose by the matter.

—me tabula sacer

Votiva paries, indicat uvida,

Suspendisse potenti

Vestimenta maris Deo.—HOR. Car. i. Od. v. 13.

By tables of the vowes which I did owe Fastned thereto the sacred wall doth shewe;
I have hung-up my garments water-wet,
Unto that God whose power on seas is great.

It is now high time to speake plainly of it. His self-
 But even as to another, I would perhaps say; restraint
 My friend thou dotest, the love of thy times
 hath small affinity with faith and honesty;

—hæc si tu postules

Ratione certa facere, nihilo plus agas,

Quàm si des operam, ut cum ratione insanias.

—TER. Eunuc. act. i. sc. 1.

If this you would by reason certaine make,
 You do no more, then if the paines you take,
 To be starke mad, and yet, to thinke it reason fit.

And yet if I were to beginne anew, it should bee by the very same path and progresse, how fruitlesse soever it might proove unto me. Insufficiency and sottishnesse are commendable in a discommendable action. As much as I separate my selfe from their humour in that, so much I approach unto mine owne. Moreover, I did never suffer my selfe to bee wholly given over to that sport; I therewith pleased, but forgot not my selfe. I ever kept that little understanding and discretion, which nature hath bestowed on me, for their service and mine; some motion towards it, but no dotage. My conscience also was engaged therein, even unto incontineny and excesse, but never unto ingratitude, treason, malice or cruelty. I bought not the pleasure of this vice at all rates; and was content with it's owne and simple cost. Nullum intra se vitium est (SEN. Epi. xciv.), There is no vice contained in it selfe. I hate almost alike a crouching and dull lasinesse, and a toilesome and thorny working. The one pincheth, the other dulleth mee.

'Love is
a vigilant,
lively

I love wounds as much as bruses, and blood wipes as well as dry-blowes. I had in the practise of this solace, when I was fitter for it, an even moderation betweene these two extremities. Love is a vigilant, lively and blithe agitation: I was neither troubled nor tormented with it, But heated and distempred by it: There wee must make a stay; It is only hurtfull unto fooles. A young man demanded of the Philosopher Panetius, whether it would beseeme a wise man to be in love; Let wisemen alone (quoth he) but for thee and me that are not so, it were best not to engage our selves into so stirring and violent a humour, which makes us slaves to others and contemptible unto our selves. He said true, for we ought not entrust a matter so dangerous, unto a minde that hath not wherewith to sustaine the approaches of it, nor effectually to quaille the speach of Agesilaus; That wisdom and love cannot live together: It is a vaine occupation (t'is true) unseemely, shamefull and lawlesse: But using it in this manner, I esteeme it wholesome and fit to rouze a dull spirit and a heavy body: and as a physitian experienced, I would prescribe the same unto a man of my complexion and forme, as soone as any other receipt, to keepe him awake and in strength, when he is well in yeares; and delay him from the gripings of old age. As long as we are but in the suburbes of it, and that our pulse yet beateth,

*Dum nova canities, dum prima et recta senectus,
Dum superest Lachesi quod torqueat, et pedibus me
Porto meis, nullo dextram subeunte bacillo.*

—JUVEN. Sat. iii. 26.

While hoarie haire is new, and ould-age fresh and straight,
 While Lachesis hath yet to spin, while I my waight
 Beare on my feete, and stand, without staffe in my hand.

and blithe agitation'

We had need to bee sollicit and tickled, by some biting agitation, as this is. See but what youth, vigour and jollity it restored unto wise Anacreon. And Socrates, when hee was elder then I am, speaking of an amorous object: leaning (saies hee) shoulder to shoulder, and approaching my head unto his, as [we] were both together looking upon a booke, I felt, in truth, a sudden tingling or prickling in my shoulder, like the biting of some beast, which more then five daies after tickled mee, whereby a continuall itching glided into my heart. But a casuall touch, and that but in a shoulder, to enflame, to dis-temper and to distract a minde, enfeebled, tamed and cooled through age; and of all humane mindes the most reformed. And why not I pray you? Socrates was but a man, and would neither be nor seeme to bee other. Philosophie contends not against naturall delights, so that due measure bee joyned therewith; and alloweth the moderation, not the shunning of them. The efforts of her resistance are employed against strange and bastard or lawlesse ones. She saith, that the bodies appetites ought not to be encreased by the minde. And wittily adviseth us, that we should not excite our hunger by satiety; not to stuffe, instead of filling our bellies: to avoide all jovissance that may bring us to want: and shunne

We are all meat and drink, which may make us hungry not, or thirstie. As in the service of love, shee
'during this earthly prison, appoints us to take an object, that onely may satisfie the bodies neede, without once moving
the mind : which is not there to have any doing,
but only to follow and simply to assist the body.
But have I not reason to thinke, that these precepts, (which in mine opinion are elsewhere somewhat rigorous) have reference unto a body
which doth his office ; and that a dejected one,
as a weakned stomack may be excused if he cherish and sustaine the same by arte, and by the entercourse of fantazie, to restore it the desires, the delights and blithnesse, which of it selfe it hath lost ? May we not say, that there is nothing in us, during this earthly prison, simply corporall, or purely spirituall ? and that injuriously
we dismember a living man ? that there is reason
we should carrie our selves in the use of pleasure, at least as favourably as we do in the pangs of griefe ? For example, it was vehement, even unto perfection, in the soules of Saints, by repentance. The body had naturally a part therein, by the right of their combination, and yet might have but little share in the cause : and were not contented that it should simply follow and assist the afflicted soule : they have tormented the body
it selfe with convenient and sharpe punishments ;
to the end that one with the other, the body and the soule might a vie plunge man into sorrow so much the more saving, by how much the more smarting. In like case, in corporal pleasures, is it not injustice to quaile and coole the minde,

and say, it must thereunto be entrained, as unto a forced bond, or servile necessity? She should rather hatch and cherish them, and offer and invite it selfe unto them; the charge of swaying rightly belonging to her. Even as in my conceit, it is her part, in her proper delights, to inspire and infuse into the body all sense or feeling which his condition may beare, and indevour that they may be both sweet and healthy for him. For, as they say, tis good reason, that the body follow not his appetites to the mindes prejudice or dammage. But why is it not likewise reason, that the minde should not follow hers to the bodies danger and hurt? I have no other passion that keeps mee in breath. What avarice, ambition, quarels, sutes in law, or other contentions worke and effect in others who as my selfe have no assigned vacation, or certaine leisure, love would performe more commodiously: It would restore me the vigilancy, sobriety, grace and care of my person; and assure my countenance against the wrinckled frowns of age (those deformed and wretched frownes) which else would blemish and deface the same; It would reduce me to serious, to sound and wise studies, whereby I might procure more love, and purchase more estimation: It would purge my minde from despaire of it selfe, and of its use, acquainting the same againe with it selfe: It would divert me from thousands of irksome tedious thoughts, and melancholy carking cares, wherewith the doting idlenesse and crazed condition of our age doth charge and comber us: It would restore and heat, simply corporall,

or purely spirituall'

Youth and age though but in a dreame, the blood which nature forsaketh : It would uphold the drooping chinne, and somewhat strengthen or lengthen the shrunk sinewes, decaied vigour, and dulled lives-blihenesse of silly wretched man, who gallops apace to his ruine. But I am not ignorant how hard a matter it is to attaine to such a commodity : Through weakenesse and long experience, our taste is growne more tender, more choise and more exquisite. We challenge most, when we bring least ; we are most desirous to choose, when we least deserve to be accepted : And knowing our selves to bee such, we are lesse hardy and more distrustfull : Nothing can assure us to be beloved, seeing our condition and their quality. I am ashamed to be in the companie of this greene, blooming and boyling youth ;

Cujus in indomito constantior inguine nervus, Quàm nova collibus arbor inhæret :

—HOR. Epod. xii. 19.

Why should we present our wretchednesse amid this their jollity ?

*Possint ut juvenes visere fervidi
Multo non sine risu, Dilapsam in cineres facem,*

—HOR. Car. iv. Od. xiii. 26.

That hot young men may go and see,
Not without sport and mery glee,
Their fire-brands turn'd to ashes be.

They have both strength and reason on their side : let us give them place : we have no longer holde fast. This bloome of budding beauty, loves not to be handled by such nummed, and so clomsie hands, nor would it be dealt-with by meanes purely materiall or ordinary stuffe. For, as that ancient Philosopher answered one that mocked him, because hee could not obtaine the favour of a yongling, whom he suingly pursued: My friend (quoth he) the hooke bites not at such fresh cheese. It is a commerce needing relation and mutuall correspondency: other pleasures that we receive, may be requitted by recompences of different nature: but this cannot be repaid but with the very same kinde of coyne. Verily, the pleasure I do others in this sport, doth more sweetly tickle my imagination, then that is done unto me. Now if no generous minde, can receive pleasure where he returneth none; it is a base minde that would have all duty and delights to feed with conference, those under whose charge he remaineth. There is no beauty, nor favour, nor familiarity so exquisite, which a gallant minde should desire at this rate. Now if women can do us no good but in pittie, I had much rather not to live at all, then to live by almes. I would I had the priviledge to demande of them, in the same stile I have heard some beg in Italy: Fate bene per voi, Do some good for your selfe: or after the manner that Cyrus exhorted his souldiers; Whosoever loveth mee, let him follow mee. Consort your selfe, will some say to me, with those of your owne condition, whom the company of like fortune will yeeld of more easie accesse. Oh sottish and wallowish composition;

Love for love's sake only

The
season of love is

—nolo

Barbam vellere mortuo leoni.—MAR. x. Epig. xc. 9.

I will not pull (though not a fearde)
When he is dead a Lions beard.

Xenophon useth for an objection and accusation against Menon, that in his love he dealt with fading objects. I take more sensuall pleasure by onely viewing the mutuall, even proporcioned and delicate commixture of two yong beauties; or onely to consider the same in mine imagination, then if my selfe should be second in a lumpish, sad and disproportioned conjunction. I resigne such distasted and fantasticall appetites unto the Emperour Galba, who medled with none but cast, worne, hard-old flesh; And to that poore slave,

*O ego dii faciant talem te cernere possim,
Charâque mutatis oscula ferre comis, Amplectique meis corpus non pingue lacertis.*

—OVID. Pont. i. El. v. 49.

Gods graunt I may beholde thee in such case,
And kisse thy chang'd locks with my dearest grace,
And with mine armes thy limmes not fat embrace.

And amongst blemishing-deformities, I deeme artificiaall and forced beautie to bee of the chiefest. Emanez a young lad of Chios, supposing by gorgeous attires to purchase the beauty, which nature denied him, came to the Philosopher Arcesilaus, and asked of him, whether a wise man could be in love, or no? Yes marrie (quoth he) so it were not with a painted and sophisticate beauty, as thine is. The fowlenesse

of an old knowne woman is in my seeming, not that of so aged nor so ill-favoured, as one that's painted youth and sleeked. Shall I bouldly speake it, and not also have my throate cut for my labour? Love is not properly nor naturally in season, but in the age next unto infancy :

*Quam si puellarum insereres choro,
 Mille sagaces falleret hospites,
 Discrimen obscurum solutis Crinibus, ambiguoque vultu.*—HOR. Car. ii. Od. v. 12.

Whom if you should in crue of wenches place,
 With haire loose-hanging, and ambiguous face,
 Strangely the undiscern'd distinction might Deceive a thousand strangers of sharpe sight.

No more is perfect beauty. For, whereas Homer extends it untill such time as the chinne begins to bud. Plato himselfe hath noted the same for very rare. And the cause for which the Sophi-ster Dion termed youthes budding hayres; Aris-togitons and Harmodii, is notoriously knowne. In man-hoode I finde it already to bee somewhat
 out of date, much more in old age.

Importunus enim transvolat aridas Quercus.—Ibid. iv. Od. xiii. 9.

Importune love doth over flie.
 The Okes with withered old-age drie.

And Margaret Queen of Navarre, lengthens
 much (like a woman) the priviledge of women :
*Ordaining thirty yeares to be the season, for them
 to change the title of faire into good.* The shorter possession we allow it over our lives, the better for us. Behold it's behaviour. It is a prin-

Love
knows
no order

cock boy, who in his schoole, knows not, how far one proceeds against all order: study, exercise, custome and practise, are paths to insufficiency: the novices beare all the sway; Amor ordinem nescit, Love knowes or keeps no order. Surely it's course hath more garbe, when it is commixt with unadvisednes and trouble: faults and contrary successes, give it edge and grace: so it be eager and hungry, it little importeth whether it bee prudent. Observe but how he staggers, stumbleth and fooleth; you fetter and shackle him, when you guide him by arte and discretion: and you force his sacred liberty, when you submit him to those bearded, grim and tough-hard hands. Moreover, I often heare them display this intelligence as absolutely spiritual, disdaining to draw into consideration the interest which all the sences have in the same. All serveth to the purpose: But I may say, that I have often seen some of us excuse the weakenesse of their minds, in favour of their corporall beauties; but I never saw them yet, that in behalfe of the mindes-beauties, how sound and ripe soever they were, would afford an helping hand unto a body, that never so little falleth into declination. Why doth not some one of them long to produce that noble Socraticall brood; or breed that precious gem, between the body and the mind, purchasing with the price of her thighes a Philosophicall and spirituall breed and intelligence? which is the highest rate she can possibly value them at. Plato appointeth in his laws, that he who performeth a notable and worthy exploite in warre, during the time of that expedition, should not be denied a kisse or refused any other amorous favour, of whomsoever he shall please to desire it, without respect either of his ill-favourdnes, deformity, or age What he deemeth so just and allowable in commendation of Military valour, may not the same be thought as lawfull in commendation of some other worth? and why is not some one of them possessed with the humor to preoccupate on hir companions the glory of this chaste love? chaste I may well say ;

Plato's
law concerning valour
and love

—*nam si quando ad prælia ventum est,
Ut quondam stipulis magnus sine viribus ignis
In cassum furit.*—VIRG. Georg. iii. 98.

If once it come to handy-gripes; as great,
But force-lesse fire in stubble; so his heate
Rageth amaine, but all in vaine.

Vices smothered in ones thought, are not the worst. To conclude this notable commentarie, escaped from me by a flux of babling: a flux sometimes as violent as hurtfull,

*Ut missum sponsi furtivo munere malum,
Procurrit casto virginis è gremio:
Quod miseræ oblitæ molli sub veste locatum,
Dum adventu matris prosilit, excutitur,
Atque illud prono præceps agitur decursu,
Huic manat tristi conscius ore rubor.*—CATUL. El. i. 19.

As when some fruit by stealth sent from hir friend,
From chaste lap of a virgin doth descend,
Which by hir, under her soft aprone plast,
Starting at mothers comming thence is cast:
And trilling downe in hast doth head-long go,
A guilty blush in hir sad face doth flo.

‘Male and female, are cast in one same moulde’ I say, that both male and female, are cast in one same moulde; instruction and custome excepted, there is no great difference betweene them: Plato calleth them both indifferently to the society of all studies, exercises, charges and functions of warre and peace, in his Commonwealth. And the Philosopher Antisthenes took away al distinction betweene their vertue and ours. It is much more easie to accuse the one sexe, then to excuse the other. It is that which some say proverbially, Ill may the Kill call the Oven burnt taile.

CHAP. VI

Of Coaches

IT is easie to verifie, that excellent authors, writing of causes do not only make use of those which they imagine true, but eftsoones of such as themselves beleeve not: alwayes provided they have some invention and beautie. They speake sufficiently, truly and profitably, if they speake ingeniously. We cannot assure our selves of the chiefe cause: we huddle up a many together, to see whether by chance it shall be found in that number,

*Namque unam dicere causam,
Non satis est, verum plures unde una tamen sit.*

—LUCRET. vi. 700.

Enough it is not one cause to devise,
But more, whereof that one may yet arise.

Will you demand of me, whence this custome ariseth, to blesse an say God helpe to those that sneese? We produce three sortes of winde; that issuing from belowe is too undecent; that from the mouth, implieth some reproach of gourmandise; the third is sneeing: and because it commeth from the head, and is without imputation, we thus kindly entertaine it: Smile not at this subtilty, it is (as some say) Aristotles. Me seemeth to have read in Plutarch (who of all the authors I know, hath best commixt arte with nature, and coupled judgement with learning) where he yeeldeth a reason, why those which travell by sea, do sometimes feelee such qualmes and risings of the stomack, saying, that it proceedeth of a kinde of feare: having found-out some reason, by which he prooveth, that feare may cause such an effect. My selfe who am much subject unto it, know well, that this cause doth nothing concerne me. And I know it, not by argument, but by necessary experience, without alleaging what some have tolde me, that the like doth often happen unto beasts, namely unto swine, when they are farthest from apprehending any danger: and what an acquaintance of mine hath assured me of himselfe, and who is greatly subject unto it, that twice or thrice in a tempestuous storme, being surprised with exceeding feare, all manner of desire or inclination to vomit had left him. As to that ancient good fellow; Pejus vexabar quàm ut periculum mihi succurreret. I was worse vexed then that danger could helpe me. I never apprehended feare upon the water; nor

An explanation
of sea-sickness

‘Even any where else (yet have I often had just cause to feare, offred me, if death it selfe may give it) which courage either might trouble or astony me. It proceedeth is re- sometimes as well from want of judgement, as quired’ from lacke of courage. All the dangers I have had, have beene when mine eyes were wide-open,
and my sight cleare, sound and perfect: For, even to feare, courage is required. It hath sometimes steaded me, in respect of others, to direct and keepe my flight in order, that so it might be, if not without feare, at least without dismay and astonishment. Indeed it was moved, but not amazed nor distracted. Undanted mindes march further, and represent flight, not onely temperate, setled and sound, but also fierce and bold. Report we that which Alcibiades relateth of Socrates his companion in armes. I found (saith he) after the route and discomfiture of our armie, both him
and Lachez in the last ranke of those that ranne
away, and with all safety and leasure considered him, for I was mounted upon an excellent good horse, and he on foote, and so had we combated
all day. I noted first, how in respect of Lachez:
he shewed both discreet judgement and undanted
resolution: then I observed the undismaide bravery of his march, nothing different from his ordinary pace: his looke orderly and constant,
duly observing and heedily judging what ever passed round about him: sometimes viewing the one, and sometimes looking on the other both friends and enemies, with so composed a manner,
that he seemed to encourage the one and menace the other, signifying, that whosoever should attempt his life, must purchase the same, or his blood at a high-valued rate? and thus they both saved themselves; for, men do not willingly grapple with these; but follow such as shew or feare or dismay. Lo here the testimony of that renowned Captaine, who teacheth us what wee daily finde by experience, that there is nothing doth sooner cast us into dangers, then an inconsiderate greedinesse to avoide them. Quo timoris minus est, eo minus fermè periculi est. The lesse feare there is most commonly, the lesse danger there is. Our people is to blame, to say, such a one feareth death, when it would signifie, that he thinkes on it, and doth foresee the same. Foresight doth equally belong as well to that which concerneth us in good, as touch us in evill. To consider and judge danger, is in some sort, not to bee danted at it. I doe not find my selfe sufficiently strong to withstand the blow and violence of this passion of feare, or of any other impetuosity, were I once therewith vanquished and deterred, I could never safely recover my selfe. He that should make my minde forgoe her footing, could never bring her unto her place againe. She doth over lively sound, and over deeply search into her selfe: And therefore never suffers the wound which pierced the same, to be throughly cured and consolidated. It hath beene happy for me, that no infirmity could ever yet displace her. I oppose and present my selfe in the best ward I have, against all charges and assaults that beset mee. Thus the first that should beare me away, would make me unre-

The less
fear, the less danger

Mon- coverable. I encounter not two : which way taigne soever spoile should enter my hold, there am I fond of open, and remedilessly drowned. Epicurus saith, horse riding that a wise man can never passe from one state to its contrary. I have some opinion answering his sentence, that he who hath once beene a very foole, shall at no time proove verie wise. God sends my cold answerable to my cloths, and passions answering the meanes I have to indure them. Nature having discovered mee on one side, hath covered mee on the other. Having disarmed me of strength, she hath armed me with insensibility, and a regular or soft apprehension. I cannot long endure (and lesse could in my youth) to ride either in coach or litter, or to go in a boat; and both in the Citty and country I hate all manner of riding, but a horse-back: And can lesse endure a litter, then a coach, and by the same reason, more easily a rough agitation upon the water, whence commonly proceedeth feare, then the soft stirring a man shall feele in calme weather. By the same easie gentle motion, which the oares give, convaying the boat under us, I wot not how, I feele both my head intoxicated and my stomacke distempered: as I cannot likewise abide a shaking stoole under me. When as either the saile, or the gliding course of the water doth equally carry us away, or that we are but towed, that gently gliding and even agitation, doth no whit distemper or hurt me. It is an interrupted and broken motion, that offends mee; and more when it is languishing. I am not able to display its forme. Phisitions have taught mee to bind and gird my selfe with a napkin or swath round about the lower part of my belly, as a remedy for this accident; which as yet I have not tride, beeing accustomed to wrestle and withstand such defects as are in mee; and tame them by my selfe. Were my memory sufficiently informed of them, I would not thinke my time lost, heere to set down the infinite variety, which histories present unto us, of the use of coaches in the service of warre: divers according to the nations, and different according to the ages: to my seeming of great effect and necessity. So that it is wondrously strange, how we have lost all true knowledge of them; I will onely aleadge this, that even lately in our fathers time, the Hungarians did very availefully bring them into fashion, and profitably set them a work against the Turks; every one of them containing a Targattier and a Muskettier, with a certaine number of harquebuses or calivers, ready charged; and so ranged, that they might make good use of them: and all over covered with a pavesado, after the manner of a Galliotte. They made the front of their battaile with three thousand such coaches: and after the Cannon had playd, caused them to discharge and shoote off a volie of small shott upon their enemies, before they should know or feele, what the rest of the forces could doe: which was no small advancement; or if not this, they mainely drove those coaches amide the thickest of their enemies squadrons, with purpose to breake, disroute and make waie through them. Besides chariots

Of
in war

Chariots
drawn by strange
creatures the benefit and helpe they might make of them, in any suspicious or dangerous place, to flanke their troupes marching from place to place : or in hast to encomasse, to embarricado, to cover or fortifie any lodgement or quarter. In my time, a gentleman of quality, in one of our frontiers, unwealdy and so burly of body, that hee could finde no horse able to beare his waight, and having a quarrell or deadly fude in hand, was wont to travaile up and down in a coach made after this fashion, and found much ease and good in it. But leave we these warlike coaches, as if their nullity were not sufficiently knowne by better tokens ; The last Kings of our first race were wont to travell in chariots drawne by foure oxen. Mark Antonie was the first, that caused himselfe, accompanied with a minsterell harlot to be drawne by Lyons fitted to a coach. So did Heliogabalus after him, naming himselfe Cibele the mother of the Gods ; and also by Tigers, counterfeiting God Bacchus : who sometimes would also bee drawne in a coach by two Stagges : and an-other time by foure mastive Dogs : and by foure naked wenches, causing himselfe to bee drawne by them in pompe and state, hee being all naked. The emperour Firmus, made his coach to bee drawne by Estriges of exceeding greatnesse, so that hee rather seemed to flye, then to roule on wheelles. The strangenesse of these inventions, doth bring this other thing unto my fantasie. That it is a kinde of pusilanimity in Monarkes, and a testimony that they doe not sufficiently know what they are, when they labour to shew their worth, and endeavour to appeare unto the world, by excessive and intolerable expences. A thing, which in a strange country might somewhat bee excused; but amongst his native subjects, where hee swayeth all in all, hee draweth from his dignity the extreamest degree of honour, that hee may possible attaine unto. As for a gentleman, in his owne private house to apparel himselfe richly and curiously, I deeme it a matter vaine and superfluous; his house, his houshold, his traine and his kitchin doe sufficiently answere for him. The counsell which Isocrates giveth to his King (in my conceite) seemeth to carry some reason: when hee willeth him to bee richly-stored and stately adorned with mooveables and houshold-stuffe, forsomuch as it is an expence of continuance, and which descendeth even to his posterity or heires: And to avoyde all magnificences, which presently vanish both from custome and memory. I loved when I was a yonger brother to set my selfe foorth and bee gaye in cloathes, though I wanted other necessaires; and it became mee well: There are some on whose backes their rich Robes weepe, or as wee say their rich cloathes are lyned with heavy debts. We have divers strange tales of our auncient Kings frugalitie about their owne persons, and in their gifts: great and farre renouned Kings both in credit, in valour and in fortune. Demosthenes mainly combates the law of his Citie, who assigned their publike money to be imployed

Excessive
expences of Kings

Worthy employment of wealth about the stately setting forth of their playes and feasts: He willeth that their magnificence should bee seene in the quantity of tall ships well manned and appointed, and armies well furnished. And they have reason to accuse Theophrastus, who in his booke of riches established a contrarie opinion, and upholdeth such a quality of expences, to be the true fruit of wealth and plenty. They are pleasures (saith Aristotle) that onely touch the vulgar and basest communalty, which as soone as a man is satisfied with them, vanish out of minde; and whereof no man of sound judgement or gravity can make any esteeme. The imployment of it, as more profitable, just and durable would seeme more royall, worthy and commendable, about ports, havens, fortifications and walles; in sumptuous buildings, in churches, hospitals, colledges, mending of heighwayes and streetes, and such like monuments: in which things Pope Gregory the thirteenth shall leave aye-lasting and commendable memory unto his name: and wherein our Queene Catherin should witnes unto succeeding ages her naturall liberality and exceeding bounty, if her meanes were answerable to her affection. Fortune hath much spighted mee to hinder the structure and breake-off the finishing of our new-bridge in our great Citty; and before my death to deprive mee of all hope to see the great necessity of it set forward againe. Moreover, it appeareth unto subjects, spectators of these triumphs, that they have a show made them of their owne riches, and that they are feasted at their proper charges: For, the people doe easily presume of their kings, as wee doe of our servants; that they should take care plenteously to provide us of whatsoever wee stand in neede of, but that on their behalfe they should no way lay hands on it. And therefore the Emperor Galba, sitting at supper, having taken pleasure to heare a musician play and sing before him, sent for his casket, out of which he tooke a handful of Crowns and put them into his hand, with these wordes, Take this, not as a gift of the publique money, but of mine owne private store. So is it, that it often commeth to passe, that the common people have reason to grudge, and that their eyes are fedde, with that which should feede their belly. Liberality it selfe, in a soveraigne hand is not in her owne luster: private men have more right, and may challenge more interest in her. For, taking the matter exactly as it is, a King hath nothing that is properly his owne; hee oweth even himselfe to others. Authority is not given in favour of the authorising, but rather in favour of the authorised. A superiour is never created for his owne profit, but rather for the benefit of the inferiour: And a Phisition is instituted for the sicke, not for himselfe. All Magistracie, even as each arte, rejecteth her end out of her selfe. Nulla ars in se versatur. No arte is all in it selfe. Wherefore the governours and overseers of Princes childhood or minority, who so earnestly endeavor to imprint this vertue of bounty and liberality in them; and teach them not to refuse any thing, and esteeme nothing so well

A King
has little really his own

Sow with the hand,
not the sack

employed, as what they shall give (an instruction which in my dayes I have seene in great credit) either they preferre and respect more their owne profit than their masters; or else they understand not aright to whom they speake. It is too easie a matter to imprint liberality in him, that hath wherewith plenteously to satisfie what he desireth at other mens charges. And his estimation being directed not according to the measure of the present, but according to the quality of his meanes, that exerciseth the same, it commeth to prove vaine in so puissant hands. They are found to bee prodigall, before they be liberall. Therefore it is but of small commendation, in respect of other royall vertues. And the onely (as said the tyrant Dionysius) that agreed and squared well with tyrannie it selfe. I would rather teach him the verse of the ancient labourer, τῇ χειρὶ δεῖ σπεῖρειν ἀλλὰ μὴ ὄλῳ τῷ θυλακῷ.

Not whole sakes, but by the hand

A man should sow his seed i' the land.

—PLUT. De Athen.

—ERAS. Chil. iii. cent. i. ad. 32.

That whosoever will reape any commodity by it, must sow with his hand, and not powre out of the sacke: that corne must be discreetly scattered, and not lavishly dispersed: And that being to give, or to say better, to pay and restore to such a multitude of people, according as they have deserved, he ought to be a loyall, faithfull, and advised distributor thereof. If the liberality of a Prince be without heedie discretion and measure, I would rather have him covetous and sparing. Princely vertue seemeth to consist most in justice. And of all parts of justice, that doth best and most belong to Kings, which accompanieth liberality. For they have it particularly reserved to their charge; whereas all other justice, they happily exercise the same by the intermission of others. Immoderate bounty is a weake meane to acquire them good will: for it rejecteth more people than it obtaineth: Quo in plures usus sis, minus in multos uti possis. Quid autem est stultius, quàm, quod libenter facias, curare ut id diutius facere non possis? (Cic. Off. i.). The more you have used it to many, the lesse may you use it to many more: And what is more fond than what you willingly would doe, to provide you can no longer doe it? And if it be employed without respect of merit, it shameth him that receiveth the same, and is received without grace. Some Tyrants have been sacrificed to the peoples hatred, by the very hands of those, whom they had rashly preferred and wrongfully advanced: such kinde of men, meaning to assure the possession of goods unlawfully and indirectly gotten, if they shew to hold in contempt and hatred, him from whom they held them, and in that combine themselves unto the vulgar judgement and common opinion. The subjects of a Prince, rashly excessive in his gifts, become impudently excessive in begging: they adhere, not unto reason, but unto example. Verily we have often just cause to blush, for our impudency. We are immoderate bounty

Evils of

Cove-tousness
is ever ungrateful

over-paid according to justice, when the recompence equaleth our service: for, doe we not owe a kinde of naturall duty to our Princes? If he beare our charge, he doth overmuch; it sufficeth if hee assist it: the over-plus is called a benefit, which cannot be exacted; for the very name of liberality implyeth liberty. After our fashion we have never done; what is received is no more reckoned of: onely future liberality is loved: Wherefore the more a Prince doth exhaust himselfe in giving, the more friends he impoverisheth. How should he satisfie intemperate desires, which increase according as they are replenished? Who so hath his minde on taking, hath it no more on what he hath taken. Covetousnesse hath nothing so proper, as to bee ungratefull. The example of Cyrus shal not ill fit this place, for the behoofe of our kings of these daies, as a touch-stone, to know whether their gifts be wel or ill employed; and make them perceive how much more happily that Emperour did wound and oppresse them, than they doe. Whereby they are afterward forced to exact and borrow of their unknowne subjects, and rather of such as they have wronged and aggrieved, then of those they have enriched and done good unto: and receive no aids, where any thing is gratitude, except the name. Cræsus upbraided him with his lavish bounty, and calculated what his treasure would amount unto, if he were more sparing and close-handed. A desire surprised him to justifie his liberality, and dispatching letters over all parts of his dominions, to such great men of his estate, whom hee had particularly advanced, in-treated every one to assist him with as much money as they could, for an urgent necessity of his; and presently to send it him by declaration: when all these count-bookes or notes were brought him, each of his friends supposing that it sufficed not, to offer him no more than they had received of his bounteous liberality, but adding much of their owne unto it, it was found, that the said summe amounted unto much more than the niggardly sparing of Cræsus. Whereupon Cyrus said, I am no lesse greedy of riches, than other Princes, but I am rather a better husband of them. You see with what small venture I have purchased the unvaluable treasure of so many friends, and how much more faithfull treasurers they are to mee, than mercenary men would be, without obligation and without affection: and my exchequer or treasury better placed than in paltry coafers; by which I draw upon me the hate, the envy and the contempt of other Princes. The ancient Emperours were wont to draw some excuse, for the superfluity of their sports and public shewes, for so much as their authority did in some sort depend (at least in apparance) from the will of the Romane people; which from all ages are accustomed to be flattered by such kinde of spectacles and excesse.

But they were particular ones who had bred this custome, to gratifie their con-citizens and fellowes: especially by their purse, by such profusion and magnificence. It was cleane altered, when the masters and chiefe rulers came once to imitate the same. Pecuniarum translatio à justis dominis

The
example of Cyrus

Shows of the arena ad alienos non debet liberalis videri (Cic. Off. i.). The passing of money from right owners to strangers should not seeme liberality. Philip, because his sonne indeavoured by gifts to purchase the good will of the Macedonians, by a letter seemed to be displeased, and chid him in this manner: What? Wouldest thou have thy subjects to account thee for their purse-bearer, and not repute thee for their King? Wilt thou frequent and practise them? Then doe it with the benefits of thy vertue, not with those of thy cofers: Yet was it a goodly thing to cause a great quantity of great trees, all branchie and greene, to bee far brought and planted in plots yeelding nothing but dry gravell, representing a wilde shady forrest, divided in due seemely proportion: And the first day, to put into the same a thousand Estriges, a thousand Stagges, a thousand wilde Boares, and a thousand Buckes, yeelding them over to bee hunted and killed by the common people: the next morrow in the presence of all the assembly to cause a hundred great Lions, a hundred Leopards, and three hundred huge Beares to be baited and tugged in pieces: and for the third day, in bloody manner and good earnest to make three hundred couple of Gladiators or Fencers, to combate and murder one another; as did the Emperour Probus. It was also a goodly shew, to see those huge Amphitheaters all enchased with rich marble, on the outside curiously wrought with [carved] statues, and all the inner side glittering with precious and rare embellishments.

Baltheus en gemmis, en illita porticus auro.

A belt beset with gemmes behold,
Behold a walke bedawb'd with gold.

The
amphitheatre

All the sides round about that great void, replenished and invironed from the ground unto the very top, with three or fourescore rankes of steps and seates, likewise all of marble covered with faire cushions,

—exeat, inquit,

*Si pudor est, et de pulvino surgat equestri,
Cujus res legi non sufficit.*—JUVEN. Sat. iii. 153.

If shame there be, let him be gone, he cries,
And from his knightly cushion let him rise,
Whose substance to the law doth not suffice.

Where might conveniently bee placed an hundred thousand men, and all sit at ease. And the plaine-ground-worke of it, where sports were to be acted, first by Art to cause the same to open and chap in sunder with gaps and cranishes, representing hollow cavernes which vomited out the beasts appointed for the spectacle: that ended, immediately to overflow it all with a maine deepe sea, fraught with store of sea-monsters and other strange fishes, all over-laid with goodly tall ships, ready rigd and appointed to represent a Sea-fight; and thirdly, suddenly to make it smooth and drie againe, for the combate of Gladiators: and fourthly, being forthwith cleansed, to strew it over with Vermilion and Storax, insteede of gravell, for the erecting of a solemne banket, for all that infinite number of people: the last act of one onely day.

The springs
in the arena

—quoties nos descenditis arenæ
Vidimus in partes, ruptaque voragine terræ
Emersisse feras, et iisdem sæpe latebris
Aurea cum croceo creverunt arbuta libro.
Nec solum nobis silvestria cernere monstra
Contigit, equoreos ego cum certantibus ursis
Spectavi vitulos, et equorum nomine dignum,
Sed deforme pecus.

How oft have we beheld wild beasts appeare
From broken gulfes of earth, upon some parte
Of sande that did not sinke? how often there
And thence did golden boughs ore saffron'd starte?
Nor onely saw we monsters of the wood,
But I have seene Sea-calves whom Beares withstood,
And such a kinde of beast as might be named
A horse, but in most foule proportion framed.

They have sometimes caused an high steepy mountaine to arise in the midst of the sayd Amphitheaters, all over-spred with fruitfull and flourishing trees of all sortes, on the top whereof gushed out streames of water, as from out the source of a purling spring. Other times they have produced therein a great tall Ship floating up and downe, which of it selfe opened and split a sunder, and after it had disgorged from out it's bulke, foure or five hundred wild beasts to bee baited, it closed and vanished away of it selfe, without any visible helpe. Sometimes from out the bottome of it, they caused streakes and purlings of sweete water to spoute up, bubling to the highest top of the frame, and gently wating, sprinkling and refreshing that infinite multitude. To keepe and cover themselves from the violence of the wether, they caused that huge compasse to be all over-spread, sometimes with purple sailes, all curiously wrought with the needle, sometimes of silke, and of some other colour, in the twinkling of an eye, as they pleased, they displaid and spread, or drewe and pulled them in againe.

Fertility
of past ages

Quamvis non modico caleant spectacula solo Vela reducuntur cum venit Hermogenes.

—MART. xii. Epig. 29, 15.

Though fervent Sunne make't hotte to see a play,
When linnen thieves come, sailes are kept away.

The nets likewise, which they used to put before the people, to save them from harme and violence of the baited beasts, were woven with golde.

—auro quoque torta refulgent Retia.

Nets with gold enterlaced,
Their shewes with glittering graced.

If any thing bee excusable in such lavish excesse, it is, where the invention and strangenesse breedeth admiration, and not the costlie charge. Even in those vanities, wee may plainly perceive how fertile and happy those former ages were of other manner of wittes, then ours are. It hapneth of this kinde of fertilitie as of all other productions of nature. Wee may not say what nature employed then the utmost of hir power. We goe not, but rather creepe and stagger here and there: we goe our pace. I imagine our knowledge to bee weake in all senses: wee neither discern far-forward, nor see much backward. It embraceth little, and liveth not long: It is short both in extension of time, and in amplexesse of matter or invention.

The
known compared with

*Vixere fortes ante Agamemnona
Multi, sed omnes illachrymabiles
Urgentur, ignotique longa
Nocte.*—HOR. Car. iv. Od. ix. 25.

Before great Agamemnon and the rest,
Many liv'd valiant, yet are all suppress,
Unmoan'd, unknowne, in darke oblivions nest.

*Et supera bellum Trojanum et funera Trojæ,
Multi alias alii quoque res cecinere poetæ.*

—LUCR. v. 326.

Beside the Trojan warre, Troyes funerall night,
Of other things did other Poets write.

And Solons narration concerning what he had learned of the Ægyptian Priests, of their states long-life, and manner how to learne and preserve strange or forraine histories, in mine opinion is not a testimony to bee refused in this consideration. Si interminatam in omnes partes magnitudinem regionum videremus, et temporum, in quam se injiciens animus et intendens, ita latè longeque peregrinatur, ut nullam oram ultimi videat, in qua possit insistere: In hæc immensitate infinita, vis innumerabilium appareret formarum (CIC. Nat. Deo. i.). If we behold an unlimited greatnesse on all sides both of regions and times, whereupon the mind casting it selfe and intentive doth travell farre and neare, so as it sees no bounds of what is last, whereon it may insist; in this infinite immensity there would appeare a multitude of innumerable formes. If whatsoever hath come unto us by report of what is past were true, and knowne of any body, it would be lesse then nothing, in respect of that which is unknowne. the unknown

And even of this image of the world, which whilest we live therein, glideth and passeth away, how wretched, weake and how short is the knowledge of the most curious? Not onely of the particular events, which fortune often maketh exemplar and of consequence: but of the state of mighty common-wealths, large Monarkies and renowned nations, there escapeth our knowledge a hundred times more, then commeth unto our notice. We keepe a coile, and wonder at the miraculous invention of our artillerie, and amazed at the rare devise of Printing: when as unknowne to us, other men, and an other end of the world named China, knew and had perfect use of both, a thousand yeares before. If we sawe as much of this vaste world, as we see but a least part of it, it is very likely we should perceive a perpetuall multiplicity, and ever-rouling vicissitude of formes. Therein is nothing singular, and nothing rare, if regard bee had unto nature, or to say better, if relation bee had unto our knowledge: which is a weake foundation of our rules, and which doth commonly present us a right-false Image of things. How vainely do we now-adayes conclude the declination and decrepitude of the world, by the fond arguments wee drawe from our owne weakenesse, drooping and declination:

Jamque adeo affecta est ætas, affectaque tellus:
—LUCR. ii. 1159.

And now both age and land
So sicke affected stand.

The new found
world And as vainly did another conclude it's birth and youth, by the vigour he perceiveth in the wits of his time, abounding in novelties and invention of divers Arts:

*Verùm ut opinor, habet novitatem, summa, recensque
Natura est mundi, neque pridem exordia cepit:
Quare etiam quædam nunc artes expoliuntur,
Nunc etiam augescunt, nunc addita navigiis sunt Multa. —Ibid. v. 330.*

But all this world is new, as I suppose,
Worlds nature fresh, nor lately it arose:
Whereby some arts refined are in fashion,
And many things now to our navigation
Are added, daily growne to augmentation.

Our world hath of late discovered another (and who can warrant us whether it be the last of his brethren, since both the Damons, the Sibylles, and all we have hitherto been ignorant of this?) no lesse-large, fully-peopled, all-things-
yeelding, and mighty in strength, than ours:
neverthesse so new and infantine, that he is yet to learne his A.B.C. It is not yet full fifty yeeres that he knew neither letters, nor waight,
nor measures, nor apparell, nor corne, nor vines.
But was all naked, simply-pure, in Natures lappe,
and lived but with such meanes and food as his mother-nurce afforded him. If wee conclude aright of our end, and the foresaid Poet of the infancie of his age, this late-world shall but come to light, when ours shall fall into dark-nesse. The whole Universe shall fall into a palsey or convulsion of sinnowes: one member shall be maimed or shrunk, another nimble and in good plight. I feare, that by our contagion, we shall directly have furthered his declination, and hastened his ruine; and that we shall too dearely have sold him our opinions, our new-fangles and our Arts. It was an unpolluted, harmelesse infant world; yet have we not whipped and submitted the same unto our discipline, or schooled him by the advantage of our valour or naturall forces, nor have wee instructed him by our justice and integrity; nor subdued by our magnanimity. Most of their answers, and a number of the negotiations we have had with them, witnesse that they were nothing short of us, nor beholding to us for any excellency of naturall wit or perspicuitie, concerning pertinency. The wonderfull, or as I may call it, amazement-breeding magnificence of the never-like seene Cities of Cusco and Mexico, and amongst infinite such like things, the admirable Garden of that King, where all the Trees, the fruits, the Hearbes and Plants, according to the order and greatnesse they have in a Garden, were most artificially framed in gold: as also in his Cabinet, all the living creatures that his Countrey or his Seas produced, were cast in gold; and the exquisite beauty of their workes, in precious Stones, in Feathers, in Cotton and in Painting: shew that they yeilded as little unto us in cunning and industrie. But concerning unfained devotion, awefull observance of lawes, unspotted integrity, bounteous liberality, due loyalty and free liberty, gorgeous cities of Mexico

The

The shock of East and West it hath greatly availed us, that we had not so much as they: By which advantage, they have lost, cast-away, sold, undone and betrayed themselves.

Touching hardinesse and undaunted courage, and as for matchlesse constancie, unmooved assurednesse, undismayed resolution against paine, smarting, famine and death it selfe; I will not feare to oppose the examples which I may easily finde amongst them, to the most famous ancient examples, we may with all our industrie discover in all the Annales and memories of our known old World. For, as for those which have subdued them, let them lay aside the wiles, the policies and stratagems, which they have emploied to cozen, to cunny-catch, and to circumvent them; and the just astonishment which those nations might justly conceive, by seeing so unexpected an arrivall of bearded men; divers in language, in habite, in religion, in behaviour, in forme, in countenance; and from a part of the world so distant, and where they never heard any habitation was: mounted upon great and unknown monsters; against those, who had never so much as seene any horse, and lesse any beast whatsoever apt to beare, or taught to carry either man or burden; covered with a shining and hard skinne, and armed with slicing-keene weapons and glittering armour: against them, who for the wonder of the glistring of a looking-glasse or of a plaine knife, would have changed or given inestimable riches in Gold, * Precious Stones and Pearles; and who had neither the skill nor the matter wherewith at any leasure, they could have pierced our steele: to which you may adde the flashing-fire and thundring roare of shotte and Harguebuses; able to quell and daunt even Cæsar himselfe, had he beene so sodainely surprised and as little experienced as they were: and thus to come unto, and assault silly-naked people, saving where the invention of weaving of Cotton cloath was knowne and used: for the most altogether unarmed, except some bowes, stones, staves and wooden bucklers: unsuspecting poore people, surprised under colour of amity and well-meaning faith over-taken by the curiosity to see strange and unknowne things: I say, take this disparity from the conquerors, and you deprive them of all the occasions and cause of so many unexpected victories. When I consider that sterne-untamed obstinacy, and undanted vehemence, wherewith so many thousands of men, of women and children, do so infinite times present themselves unto inevitable dangers, for the defence of their Gods and liberty: This generous obstinacy to endure all extremities, all difficulties and death, more easily and willingly, then basely to yeelde unto their domination, of whom they have so abhominably beene abused: some of them choosing rather to starve with hunger and fasting, being taken, then to accept food at their enemies hands, so basely victorious: I perceave, that whosoever had undertaken them man to man, without ods of armes, of experience or of number, should have had as

Deceit
used by the conquerors

Why was not America discovered by Alexander?

dangerous a warre, or perhaps more, as any we see amongst us.

Why did not so glorious a conquest happen under Alexander, or during the time of the ancient Greekes and Romanes? or why befell not so great a change and alteration of Empires and people, under such hands as would gently have polished, reformed and incivilized, what in them they deemed to be barbarous and rude: or would have nourished and fostered those good seedes, which nature had there brought forth: adding not onely to the manuring of their grounds and ornaments of their cities, such artes as we had; and that no further then had beene necessary for them, but therewithall joyn- ing unto the originall vertues of the country, those of the ancient Grecians and Romanes? What [reparation] and what reformation would all that farre spreading world have found, if the examples, demeanors and pollicies, where- with we first presented them, had called and allured those uncorrupted nations, to the admira- tion and imitation of vertue, and had established betweene them and us a brotherly society and mutuall correspondency? How easie a matter had it beene, profitably to reforme, and chris- tianly to instruct, minds yet so pure and new, so willing to bee taught, being for the most part endowed with so docile, so apt and so yeelding naturall beginnings? whereas contrarywise, we have made use of their ignorance and inexperience, [to] drawe them more easily unto treason, fraude, luxurie, avarice and all manner of inhumanity and cruelty, by the example of our life and patterne of our customes. Who ever raised the service of marchandize and benefit of traffick to so high a rate? So many goodly citties ransacked and razed; so many nations destroyed and made desolate; so infinite millions of harmelesse people of all sexes, states and ages, massacred, ravaged and put to the sword; and the richest, the fairest and the best part of the world topsiturvied, ruined and defaced for the traffick of Pearles and Pepper: Oh mechanically victories, oh base conquest. Never did greedy revenge, publik wrongs or generall enmities, so moodily enrage, and so passionately incense men against men, unto so horrible hostilities, bloody dissipation, and miserable calamities.

The Spanish
offer

Certaine Spaniards coasting amongst the Sea in search of mines, fortun'd to land in a very fertile, pleasant and well peopled country: unto the inhabitants whereof they declared their intent, and shewed their accustomed perswasions; saying: That they were quiet and well-meaning men, comming from farre-countries, being sent from the King of Castile, the greatest King of the habitable earth, unto whom the Pope, representing God on earth, had given the principality of all the Indies. That if they would become tributaries to him, they should bee most kindly used and courteously entreated: They required of them victualles for their nourishment; and some gold for the behoofe of certaine Physicall experiments. Moreover, they declared unto them, the beleiving in one

The natives' reply
The onely God, and the trueth of our religion, which they perswaded them to embrace, adding thereto some minatorie threatens. Whose answer was this: That happily they might be quiet and well meaning, but their countenance shewed them to be otherwise: As concerning their King, since he seemed to beg, he shewed to be poore and needy: And for the Pope, who had made that distribution, he expressed himselfe a man loving dissention, in going about to give unto a third man, a thing which was not his owne: so to make it questionable and litigious amongst the ancient possessors of it. As for victualles, they should have part of their store: And for gold, they had but little, and that it was a thing they made very small account of, as meerely unprofitable for the service of their life, whereas all their care was but how to passe it happily and pleasantly: and therefore, what quantity soever they should finde, that onely excepted which was employed about the service of their Gods, they might bouldly take it. As touching one onely God, the discourse of him had very well pleased them: but they would by no meanes change their religion, under which they had for so long time lived so happily: and that they were not accustomed to take any counsell, but of their friends and acquaintance. As concerning their menaces, it was a signe of want of judgement, to threaten those, whose nature, condition, power and meanes was to them unknowne. And therefore they should with all speed hasten to avoid their dominions (forsomuch as they were not wont to admit or take in good part the kindnesses and remonstrances of armed people, namely of strangers) otherwise they would deale with them as they had done with such others, shewing them the heads of certaine men sticking upon stakes about their Citie, which had lately beene executed. Loe here an example of the stammering of this infancy.

Fate of the King
of Peru

But so it is, neither in this, nor in infinite other places, where the Spaniards found not the marchandise they sought for, neither made stay or attempted any violence, whatsoever other commodity the place yeelded: witnesse my Canibales. Of two the most mighty and glorious Monarkes of that world, and peradventure of all our Westernne parts, Kings over so many Kings: the last they deposed and overcame: He of Peru, having by them been taken in a battell, and set at so excessive a ransome, that it exceedeth all beliefe, and that truely paid: and by his conversation having given them apparant signes of a free, liberall, undanted and constant courage, and declared to be of a pure, noble, and well composed understanding; a humour possessed the conquerors, after they had most insolently exacted from him a Million, three hundred five and twenty thousand, and five hundred waights of golde; besides the silver and other precious things, which amounted to no lesse a summe (so that their horses were all shood of massive gold) to discover (what disloyalty or treachery soever it might cost them) what the remainder of this Kings treasure might be, and without controlment enjoy what ever he might have hidden or concealed from them.

Fate of the King
of Mexico

Which to compasse, they forged a false accusation and prooffe against him ; That hee practised to raise his provinces, and intended to induce his subjects to some insurrection, so to procure his liberty. Whereupon, by the very judgement of those who had complotted this forgery and treason against him, hee was condemned to be publikely hanged and strangled: having first made him to redeeme the torment of being burned alive, by the baptisme which at the instant of his execution, in charity they bestowed upon him. A horrible and the like never heard of accident: which neverthesse he undismayedly endured with an unmoved manner, and truly-royall gravity, without ever contradicting himselfe either in countenance or speech. And then, somewhat to mitigate and circumvent those silly unsuspecting people, amazed and astonished at so strange a spectacle, they counterfeited a great mourning and lamentation for his death, and appointed his funeralls to bee solemnely and sumptuously celebrated.

The other King of Mexico, having a long time manfully defended his besieged City, and in the tedious siege, shewed what ever pinching-sufferance, and resolute-perseverance can effect, if ever any couragious Prince or warre-like people shewed the same ; and his disastrous successe having delivered him alive into his enemies hands, upon conditions to bee used as beseemed a King: who during the time of his imprisonment, did never make the least shew of any thing unworthy that glorious title. After which victory, the Spaniards not finding that quantitie of gold they had promised themselves, when they had ransacked and ranged all corners, they by meanes of the cruellest tortures and horriblest torments they could possibly devise, beganne to wrest and draw some more from such prisoners as they had in keeping. But unable to profit any thing that way, finding stronger hearts than their torments, they in the end fell to such moody outrages, that contrary to all law of nations, and against their solemne vowes and promises, they condemned the King himselfe and one of the chiefest Princes of his Court, to the Racke, one in presence of another: The Prince environed round with hot burning coales, being overcome with the exceeding torment, at last in most pitious sort turning his dreary eyes toward his Master, as if hee asked mercy of him for that hee could endure no longer; The king fixing rigorously and fiercely his lookes upon him, seeming to upbraid him with his remisnesse and pusillanimity, with a sterne and settled voyce uttered these few words unto him; What? supposest thou I am in a cold bath? am I at more ease than thou art? Whereat the silly wretch immediately fainted under the torture, and yeelded up the ghost. The king half rosted, was carried away: Not so much for pittie (for what ruth could ever enter so barbarous mindes, who upon the surmised information of some odde piece or vessell of golde, they intended to get, would broyle a man before their eyes, and not a man

and of
one of his Princes

A false zeal toward religion

onely, but a king, so great in fortune and so renowned in desert?) but for as much as his unmatched constancy did more and more make their inhumane cruelty ashamed: They afterward hanged him, because he had courageously attempted by armes to deliver himselfe out of so long captivity and miserable subjection; where he ended his wretched life, worthy an high minded and never danted Prince. At another time, in one same fire, they caused to be burned all alive foure hundred common men, and threescore principall Lords of a Province, whom by the fortune of warre they had taken prisoners. These narrations we have out of their owne bookes: for they doe not onely avouch, but vauntingly publish them. May it bee, they doe it for a testimony of their justice or zeale toward their religion? verily they are wayes over-different and enemies to so sacred an ende. Had they proposed unto themselves to enlarge and propagate our religion, they would have considered, that it is not amplified by possession of lands, but of men: and would have beene satisfied with such slaughters, as the necessity of warre bringeth, without indifferently adding thereunto so bloody a butchery, as upon savage beasts; and so universall as fire or sword could ever attaine unto; having purposely preserved no more than so many miserable bond-slaves, as they deemed might suffice for the digging, working and service of their mines: So that divers of their chieftains have beene executed to death, even in the places they had conquered, by the appointment of the Kings of Castile, justly offended at the seld-seene horror of their barbarous demeanours, and well nigh all disesteemed, condemned and hated. God hath meritoriously permitted, that many of their great pillages, and ill gotten goods, have either beene swallowed up by the revenging Seas in transporting them, or consumed by the intestine warres and civill broiles, wherewith themselves have devoured one another; and the greatest part of them have been overwhelmed and buried in the bowels of the earth, in the very places they found them, without any fruit of their victory. Touching the objection which some make, that the receipt, namely in the hands of so thrifty, wary and wise a Prince, doth so little answer the fore-conceived hope, which was given unto his predecessors, and the said former abundance of riches, they met withall at the first discovery of this new-found world, (for although they bring home great quantity of gold and silver, we perceive the same to be nothing, in respect of what might be expected thence) it may be answered, that the use of money was there altogether unknowne; and consequently that all their gold was gathered together, serving to no other purpose, than for shew, state and ornament, as a moovable reserved from father to sonne by many puissant Kings, who exhausted all their mines, to collect so huge a heape of vessels or statues for the ornament of their Temples, and embellishing of their Pallaces: whereas all our gold is employed in commerce and trafficke betweene

Loss of ill-gotten gain

Beliefs
of the Mexicans man and man. Wee mince and alter it into a thousand formes: wee spend, wee scatter and disperse the same to severall uses. Suppose our Kings should thus gather and heape up all the gold they might for many ages hoard up together, and keepe it close and untouched. Those of the kingdome of Mexico were somewhat more encivilized, and better artists, than other nations of that world. And as wee doe, so judged they, that this Universe was neare his end: and tooke the desolation wee brought amongst them as an infallible signe of it. They beleevd the state of the world, to bee divided into five ages, as in the life of five succeeding Sunnes, whereof foure had already ended their course or time; and the same which now shined upon them, was the fifth and last. The first perished together with all other creatures, by an universall inundation of waters. The second by the fall of the heavens upon us which stifled and overwhelmed every living thing: in which age they affirme the Giants to have beene, and shewed the Spaniards certaine bones of them, according to whose proportion the stature of men came to bee of the height of twenty hand-fuls. The third was consumed by a violent fire, which burned and destroyed all. The fourth by a whirling emotion of the ayre and windes, which with the violent fury of it selfe, remooved and overthrew divers high mountaines: saying, that men dyed not of it, but were transformed into Munkeis. (Oh what impressions doth not the weakenesse of mans beliefe admit?) After the consummation of this fourth Sunne, the world continued five and twenty yeares in perpetuall darkenesse: in the fifteenth of which one man and one woman were created, who renewed the race of man-kinde. Ten yeares after, upon a certaine day, the Sunne appeared as newly created: from which day beginneth ever since the calculation of their yeares. On the third day of whose creation, died their ancient Gods, their new ones have day by day beene borne since. In what manner this last Sunne shall perish, my auctor could not learne of them. But their number of this fourth change, doth jumpe and meete with that great conjunction of the Starres, which eight hundred and odde yeares since, according to the Astrologians supposition, produced divers great alterations and strange novelties in the world. Concerning the proud pompe and glorious magnificence, by occasion of which I am fallen into this discourse, nor Grece, nor Rome, nor Ægipt, can (bee it in profit, or difficultie or nobility) equall or compare sundrie and divers of their workes. The cawcy or high-way which is yet to bee seene in Peru, erected by the Kings of that countrie, stretching from the city of Quito, unto that of Cusco (containing three hundred leagues in length) straight, even, and fine, and twentie paces in breadth curiously paved, rayzed on both sides with goodly, high masonrie-walles, all along which, on the inner side there are two continuall running streames, pleasantly beset with beautious trees, which they call Moly. In

The Peruvian
high-way

Retum- framing of which, where they mette any moun-
bons à taines or rockes, they have cut, rased and levelled nos them, and filled all hollow places with lime and coches stone. At the ende of every dayes journey, as stations, there are built stately great pallaces, plentiously stored with all manner of good victuals, apparrell and armes, as well for day-lie way-fairing men, as for such armies that might happen to passe that way. In the estimation of which worke I have especially considered the difficulty, which in that place is particularly to bee remembred. For they built with no stones that were lesse then ten foote square: They had no other meanes to cary or transport them, then by meere strength of armes
to draw and dragge the carriage they needed:
they had not so much as the arte to make scaffolds; nor knew other devise, then to raise
so much earth or rubbish, against their building, according as the worke riseth, and afterward to take it away againe. But returne we to our coaches. In steade of them, and of all other carrying beastes they caused themselves to be carried by men, and upon their shoulders. This last King of Peru, the same day hee was taken,
was thus carried upon rafters or beames of massive Golde, sitting in a faire chaire of state, likewise all of golde, in the middle of his battaile. Looke how many of his porters as were slaine, to make him fall (for all their endeavour was to take him alive) so many others, and as it were avye, tooke and underwent presently the place of the dead: so that they could never be brought down or made to falle, what slaughter so ever was made of those kinde of people, untill such time as a horseman furiously ranne to take him by some part of his body, and so pulled him to the ground.

‘Defects found in all things’

CHAP. VII

Of the incommodie of greatnesse

SINCE we cannot attaine unto it, let us revenge our selves with railing against it: yet is it not absolute railing, to finde fault with any thing: There are defects found in all things, how faire soever in show, and desirable they be. It hath generally this evident advantage, that when ever it pleaseth it will decline, and hath well-nigh the choise of one and other condition. For a man doth not fall from all heights; divers there are, whence a man may descend without falling. Verily, me seemeth, that we value it at too high a rate: and prize overdeare the resolution of those, whom we have either seene or heard, to have contemned, or of their owne motion rejected the same. Her essence is not so evidently commodious, but a man may refuse it without wonder. Indeed I finde the labour very hard in suffering of evils; but in the contentment of a meane measure of fortune, and shunning of greatnesse, therein I see no great difficulty. In my conceit, it is a vertue, whereunto my selfe, who am but a simple

'Mediocrity
 best fitteth
 me'

ninny, might easily attaine, and without great contention. What shall they doe, who would also bring into consideration, the glory, which accompanieth this refusall, wherein may fall more ambition, then even in the desire and absolute enjoying of greatnesse? For somuch as ambition is never better directed according to it selfe, then by a straying and unfrequented path. I sharpen my courage toward patience, and weaken the same against desire. I have as much to wish for as another, and leave my wishes as much liberty and indiscretion: but yet, it never came into my minde, to wish for Empire, for Royalty or eminency of high and commanding fortunes. I aime not that way: I love my selfe too well. When I thinke to grow, It is but meanly; with a forced and coward advancement; fit for me: yea in resolution, in wisdom, in health, in beauty, and also in riches. But this credite, this aspiring reputation, this overswaying authority, suppresseth my imagination. And cleane opposite to some other, I should peradventure love my selfe better, to be the second or third man in Perigot, then the first in Paris: At least, without faining, I had rather be the third man in Paris, then the first in charge. I will neither contend with an Usher of a doore, as a silly unknownen man; nor with gaping and adoration make a Lane through the throng as I passe. I am enured to a meane calling; mediocrity best fitteth me, as well by my fortune, as by mine owne humor. And have shewed by the conduct of my life and course of my enterprises, that I have rather sought to avoid, then otherwise to embrace beyond the degree of fortune that at my birth it pleased God to call me unto. Each naturall constitution, is equally just and easie. My minde is so dull and slowe, that I measure not good fortune according to her height, but rather according to her facility. And if my hart be not great enough, it is ratably free and open, and who biddeth me, bouldly to publish my weaknesse. Should any will me, on the one part, to conferre and consider the life of L. Thurius Balbus, a worthy gallant man, wise, faire, goodly, healthy, of good understanding, richly-plentious in all maner of commodities and pleasures, leading a quiet easefull life, altogether his owne, with a minde armed, and well prepared against death, superstition, griefes, cares and other encombrances of humane necessity; dying in his old age, in an honourable battell, with his weapons in his hand, for the defence of his countrie; and on the other side the life of M. Regulus, so high and great, as all men know, together with his admirable and glorious end: the one unmentioned and without dignity, the other exemplare and wonderfully renowned: truly I would say what Cicero saith of it, had I the gift of well-speaking as hee had. But if I were to sute them unto mine, I would also say, that the former is as much agreeing to my quality, and to the desire I endeavour to conforme my quality unto, as the second is farre beyond it. That to this I cannot attaine but by veneration; and to the other I would willingly attaine by

Balbus
and Regulus
compared

Difficult office of kingship

custome. But returne we to our temporall greatness, whence we have digressed. I am distasted of all mastery, both active and passive. Otanes one of the seaven that by right might challenge the Crowne, or pretend the Kingdome of Persia, resolved upon such a resolution as I should easily have done the like: which was, that he utterly renounced all maner of claime he might in any sort pretend unto that crowne, to his fellow competitores, were it either by election or chance: alwayes provided that both himselfe and all his, might live in that Empire, free from all subjections, and exempted from all maner of commandement, except that of the ancient lawes: and might both challenge all liberty, and enjoy all immunities, that should not prejudice them: being as impacient to command, as to be commanded. The sharpest and most difficile profession of the world, is (in mine opinion) worthily to act and play the King. I excuse more of their faults, then commonly other men doe: and that in consideration of the downebearing waight of their immense charge, which much astonisheth me: It is a very hard task to keep a due measure, in so unmeasurable a power. Yet is it, that even with those, that are of a lesse excellent nature, it is a singular incitation to vertue, to be seated in such a place, where you shall doe no maner of good, that is not registred and recorded: And where the least wel-dooing extendeth to so many persons: And where your sufficiency (as that of Preachers) is principally directed to the people; a weake and partiall judge, easily to be beguiled, and easie to be pleased. There are but few things, of which we may give a sincere judgement: for there be very few, wherein in some sort or other, we are not particularly interested. Superiority and inferiority, maistry and subjection, are joyntly tied unto a naturall kinde of envy and contestation; they must perpetually enter-spoile one another. I beleve neither the one nor the other, concerning hir companions rights: let us suffer reason to speake of it, which is inflexible and impassible, when or how we shall make an end. I was not long since reading of two Scottish bookes striving upon this subject. The popular makes the King to be of worse condition then a Carter: and he that extolleth Monarchy, placeth him both in power and soveraignty, many steps above the Gods. Now the incommodity of greatnesse, which here I have undertaken to note and speake of, (upon some occasion lately befallne mee) is this. There is peradventure nothing more pleasing to the commerce of men, then the Essayes, which we through jealousie of honour or valour, make one against another, be it in the exercise of the body or minde: wherein soveraigne greatnesse, hath no true or essentiall part. Verily, it hath often seemed unto me, that through over much respect, Princes are therein used disdainefully and treated injuriously: For, the thing whereat (in my youth) I was infinitely offended, was, that those which were trained and schooled with mee, should forbear to doe it in good earnest,

Rarity of an unbiassed
judgment

A horse throws a king as readily as a groom

because they found me unworthy to bee withstood or to resist their endeavours. It is that we dayly see to happen unto them; every man finding himselfe unworthy to force himselfe against them. If one perceiue them never so little affected to have the victory, there is none but will strive to yeeld it them, and that will not rather wrong his glory, then offend theirs: No man imployeth more diligence then needs he must to serve their honour. What share have Princes in the throng, where all are for them? Mee thinks I see those Paladines of former ages, presenting themselves in joustes, tiltings and combats, with bodies and armes enchanted. Brisson running against Alexander, counterfeited his course: Alexander chid him for it: but he should have caused him to be whipt. For this consideration, was Carneades wont to say, that Princes children learn't nothing aright but to mannage and ride horses; forsomuch as in all other exercises, every man yeeldeth, and giveth them the victory: but a horse who is neyther a flatterer nor a Courtier, will as soone throw the child of a King as the son of a base porter. Homer hath beene forced to consent that Venus (so sweet a saint and delicate a Goddesse) should be hurt at the siege of Troy, thereby to ascribe courage and hardinesse unto her qualities never seene in those that are exempted from danger. The Gods themselves are fained to be angry, to feare, to be jealous, to grieve, to shew passion, and be subject to mortall sense, thereby to honour them with the vertues which the Poets and Philosophers invent amongst us: Nay, they are supposed to runne away, and to have a feeling of all our imperfections. Who doth not participate both hazard and difficulties, cannot justly pretend interest in the honor, or challenge share in the pleasure, that followeth dangerous actions or hazardous attempts. It is pittie a man should be so powerfull, that all things must yeeld and give place unto him. Such as are in so high eminency of greatnesse, their fortune rejects society and conversation too farre from them; she placeth them in over remote and uncouth places. This easefull life and plausible facility to bring all under, and subject mens mindes, is an enemy to all manner of pleasure. It is a kinde of sliding, and not a going: It is to sleepe, and not to live. Conceive man accompanied with omnipotency, you overwhelme him: he must in begging manner crave some impeachment and resistance of you. His being and his good, is in want and indigence. Their good qualities are dead and lost: for, they are not heard but by comparison, and they are excluded: they have little knowledge of true praise, being beaten with so continuall and uniforme an approbation. Have they to doe with the simplest of their subjects? they have no meane to take advantage of him, if he but say; It is because he is my King, he supposeth to have sufficiently expressed, and you must understand, that in so saying, he hath lent a helping hand to overthrow himselfe. This quality suppresseth and consumeth all other true and essentiall qualities:

Good
qualities roused by opposition

Court they are even drowned in the Royalty; which flattery gives them no leave, to make the offices of their charge to prevaile, except in such actions as directly concerne and stead the same. To be a King, is a matter of that consequence, that onely by it he is so. That strange glimmering and eye-dazeling light, which round about environeth, overcasteth and hideth from us: our weake sight is thereby bleared and dissipated, as beeing filled and obscured by that greater and further-spredding brightnesse. The Senate allotted the honor and prise of eloquence unto Tiberius; he refused it, supposing that if it hath beene true, he could not revenge himselfe of so limited and partiall judgement. As we yeeld Princes all advantages of honor, so we authorize their defects and sooth-up their vices: not onely by approbation, but also by imitation. All Alexanders followers bare their heads sideling, as he did. And such as flattered Dionysius, in his owne presence did run and justle one another, and either stumbled at, or over-threw what ever stood before their feete, to inferre; that they were as short-sighted or spur-blinde, as he was. Naturall imperfections have sometimes served for commendation and favour. Nay I have seene deafnesse affected. And because the maister hated his wife, Plutarch hath seen courtiers to sue a divorce of theirs, whom they loved very well. And which is more, paillardise and all maner of dissolution hath thereby beene held in credit; as also disloyalty, blasphemy, cruelty, heresie, superstition, irreligion, wantonnesse and worse, if worse may be. Yea by an example more dangerous, then that of Mithridates his flatterers, who for somuch as their master pretended to have skill in phisick and aspired to the honor of a good Physition, came to him to have their members incized and cauterized. For these others suffer to have their soules cauterized; a much more precious and nobler part then the body. But to end where I began: Adrian the Emperor debating with Favorinus the Philosopher about the interpretation of some word; Favorinus did soone yeeld the victory unto him, his friends finding fault with him for it; you but jest, my masters (quoth he) would you not have him to be much wiser then I, who hath the absolute command over thirty legions? Augustus writ some verses against Asinius Pollio, which Pollio hearing, he said, I will hould my peace; for, it is no wisdom to contend in writing with him, who may proscribe. And they had reason: For Dionysius, because he could not equall Philoxenus in Poesie, nor match Plato in discourse, condemned the one to the stone-quarries, and sent the other to bee sold as a slave in the Ile of Ægina.

Fate of
those who oppose kings

CHAP. VIII

Of the Art of conferring

IT is a custome of our law, to condemne some, for the warning of others. To condemne them because they have misdome, were folly, as

The
teaching of self-revelation

saith Plato. For what is once done can never be undone: but they are condemned to the end that they should not offend againe, or that others may avoide the example of their offence. He who is hanged is not corrected, but others by him. Even so doe I. My errors are sometimes naturall, incorrigible and remedillesse. But whereas honest men profit the Common wealth in causing themselves to be imitated. I shall happily benefit the same, in making my selfe to be evitated.

Nonne vides Albi ut malè vivat filius, utque Barrus inops? magnum documentum, ne patriam rem Perdere quis velit.—HOR. Ser. i. sect. iv. 109.

Doe you not see, how that mans sonne lives badly,
That man's a begger by his spending madly?
A lesson great, that none take joy: His patrimony
to destroy.

By publishing and accusing my imperfections, some man may peradventure learne to feare them. The parts I most esteeme in my selfe, reape more honor by accusing, then by commending my selfe. And that's the cause I more often fall into them againe, and rest upon them. But when all the cardes be told, a man never speakes of himselfe, without losse. A mans own condemnations are ever increased: praises ever decreased. There may be some of my complexion, who am better instructed by contrariety then by similitude; and more by escaping then by following. Cato senior had a special regard to this kind of discipline, when he said, that wisemen have more to learne of fooles then fooles of wisemen. And that ancient player on the Lyra, whom Pausanias reporteth, to have beene accustomed to compell his schollers sometimes to goe heare a bad Player, who dwelt right over-against him; where they might learne to hate his discords and false measures. The horror of cruelty drawes me neerer unto clemency, then any patterne of clemency can possibly win me. A cunning rider or skillfull horseman doth not so properly teach me, to sit well on horsebacke, as doth one of our Lawyers, or a Venetian by seeing him ride. And an ill manner of speech doth better reforme mine, then any well polished forme of speaking. The sottish countenance of another, doth dayly advertise and forewarne me. That which pricketh, toucheth and rouzeth better, then that which delighteth. These times are fit to reforme us backward, more by dissenting, then by consenting; more by difference then by accord. Being but little instructed by good examples, I make use of bad: the lesson of which is ordinary. I have endeavoured, nay I have laboured to yeeld my selfe as pleasing and affable, as I saw others peevish and froward: as constant, as I saw others variable; as gentle and milde, as I perceived others intractable and wild: and as good and honest, as I discerned others wicked and dishonest. But I proposed certaine invincible measures unto my selfe. The most fruitfull and naturall exercise of our spirit, is, in my selfe-pleasing conceit, conference. The use whereof, I finde to be more delightsome, then any other action of our life: And that's

Use of bad
examples

Value of argument the reason, why, if I were now forced to choose, (being in the minde I now am in) I would rather yeeld to lose my sight, then forgoe my hearing or my speech. The Athenians and also the Romans, did ever hold this exercise in high honor and reputation, namely in their Academies. And at this day, the Italians doe yet keepe a kinde of forme and trace of it, to their great profit, as may apparantly be discerned by comparing their wits unto ours. The study and plodding on bookes, is a languishing and weake kinde of motion, and which heateth or earnesteth nothing; whereas conference doth both learne, teach and exercise at once. If I conferre with a stubborne wit, and encounter a sturdy wrestler, he toucheth me to the quicke, hits me on the flanks, and pricks me both on the left and right side: his imaginations vanquish and confound mine. Jelousie, glory and contention drive, cast and raise me above my selfe. And an unison or consent, is a quality altogether tedious and wearisome in conference. But as our minde is fortified by the communication of regular and vigorous spirits; it cannot well be expressed, how much it loseth and is bastardized, by the continuall commerce and frequentation, we have with base, weake and dull spirits. No contagion spreads it selfe further then that. I know by long experience what an ell of it is worth. I love to contest and discourse, but not with many, and onely for my selfe. For, to serve as a spectacle unto great men, and by way of contention, for one to make a glorious shew of his ready wit and running tongue: I deeme it a profession farre unfitting a man of honor. Sottishnes is an ill quality, but not to be able to endure it, and to fret and vex at it, as it hapneth to me, is another kinde of imperfection, which in [importunity] is not much behinde sottishnes: and that's it I will now accuse in my selfe: I doe with great liberty and facility, enter into conference and disputation: forsomuch as opinion findes but a hard soile to enter and take any deepe roote in me. No propositions amaze me, no conceit woundeth me, what contrariety soever they have to mine. There is no fantazie so frivolous or humor so extravagant, that in mine opinion is not sortable to the production of humane wit. Wee others, who debarre our judgement of the right to make conclusions, regard but negligently the diverse opinions: and if we lend it not our judgement, we easily affoord it our eares. Where one scale of the ballance is altogether empty, I let the other waver too and fro, under an old wives dreames. And me seemeth, I may well be excused, if I rather accept an odde number, than an even: Thursday in respect of Friday, if I had rather make a twelfth or fourteenth at a table, then a thirteenth: if when I am travelling I would rather see a Hare coasting, then crossing my way: and rather reach my left, then my right foote, to be shod. All such fond conceits, now in credit about us, deserve at least to be listned unto. As for me, they onely beare away inanity, and surely they do so. Vulgar and

Mon-
taine's delight
in it

Mon-
taigne welcomes opposition and

casuall opinions are yet of some waight, which in nature are something els then nothing. And who wadeth not so far into them, to avoid the vice of superstition, falleth happily into the blame of wilfulnesse. The contradictions then of judgements, doe neither offend nor move, but awaken and exercise me. We commonly shunne correction whereas we should rather seeke and present our selves unto it, chiefly when it commeth by the way of conference, and not of regency. At every opposition, we consider not whether it be just; but be it right or wrong, how we may avoide it: In stead of reaching our armes, we stretch forth our clawes unto it. I should endure to bee rudely handled and checked by my friends, though they should call me foole, coxcombe, or say I raved. I love a man that doth stoutly expresse himselfe, amongst honest and worthy men, and whose words answeare his thoughts. We should fortifie and harden our hearing, against the tendernesse of the ceremonious sound of words. I love a friendly society and a virile and constant familiarity: An amitie, which in the earnestnesse and vigor of it's commerce, flattereth it selfe: as love in bitings and bloody scratchings. It is not sufficiently generous or vigorous, except it be contentious and quarrelous: If she be civilised and a skilfull artist: if it feare a shocke or free encounter, and have hir starting holes or forced by-wayses. Neque enim disputari sine reprehensione potest. Disputation cannot be held without reprehension. When I am impugned or contraried, then is mine attention and not mine anger, stirred up : I advance my selfe toward him, that doth gainesay and instruct me. The cause of truth, ought to be the common cause, both to one and other : What can he answer? The passion of choller hath already wounded his judgement : trouble, before reason hath seized upon it. It were both profitable and necessary, that the determining of our disputations, might be decided by way of wagers ; and that there were a materiall marke of our losses : that we might better remember and make more accompt of it : and that my boy might say unto me : Sir, if you call to minde ; your contestation, your ignorance and your selfe-wilfulnesse, at severall times, cost you a hundred crownes the last yeare : I feast, I cherish and I embrace truth, where and in whom soever I finde it, and willingly and merily yeeld my selfe unto her, as soone as I see but her approach, though it be a farre-off, I lay downe my weapon and yeeld my selfe vanquished. And alwayes provided, one persist not or proceede therein, with an over imperious stiffnesse or commanding surlinesse ; I am well pleased to be reprovved. And I often accommodate my selfe unto my accusers more by reason of civility, then by occasion of amendment : loving by the facility of yeelding, to gratifie and foster their libertie, to teach or advertise me. It is notwithstanding no easie matter to draw men of my times unto it. They have not the courage to correct, because they want the heart to endure correction : And ever speake with dissimulation in presence one of correction in the cause of truth

It is another. I take so great a pleasure to be judged healthier to be and knowne, that it is indifferent to me, in to be whether of the two formes I be so. Mine owne beaten imagination doth so often contradict and con-
than to demne it selfe, that if another do it, all is one win unto me ; especially seeing, I give his reprehension no other authority then I list. But I shall breake a straw or fall at odds with him, that keepe himselfe so aloft ; as I know some, that will fret and chafe if their opinions be not believed, and who take it as an injury, yea and fall out with their best friends, if they will not follow it. And that Socrates ever smiling, made a collection of such contradictions as were opposed to his discourse, one might say, his force was cause of it, and that the advantage being assuredly to fall on his side, he tooke them as a subject of a new victory ; neverthelesse we see on the contrary, that nothing doth so nicely yeeld our sense unto it as the opinion of preheminance and disdain of the adversary.
And that by reason, it rather befits the weakest to accept of opposition in good part, which restore and repaire him. Verily
I seeke more the conversation of such as curbe me, then of those that feare me. It is an unsavory and hurtful pleasure, to have to doe with men, who admire and give us place. Antisthenes
commanded his children, never to be beholding unto, or thanke any that should commend them. I feele my selfe more lusty and cranke for the victory I gaine over my selfe, when in the heate or fury of the combate, I perceive to bend and fall under the power of my adversaries reason, then I am pleased with the victory, I obtaine of him by his weakenesse. To conclude, I receive all blowes and allow all at-taints given directly, how weake soever : but am very impatient at such as are stricken at ran-dan and without order. I care but little for the matter, and with me opinions are all one, and the victory of the subject in a manner indifferent. I shall quietly contest a whole day, if the conduct of the controversie be followed with order and decorum. It is not force nor subtilty, that I so much require, as forme and order. The forme and order, dayly seene in the altercations of Shep-herds, or contentions of shop-prentise boyes : but never amongst us ; If they part or give one another over, it is with incivilitie : and so doe we. But their wrangling, their brawling and im-patience, cannot make them to forgoe or forget their theame.

We may learn to contend from 'prentise
boyes'

Their discourse holds on his course. If they prevent one another, if they stay not for, at least they understand one another. A man doth ever answere sufficiently well for me, if he answere what I say. But when the disputation is con-founded and orderlesse, I quit the matter, and betake me to the forme, with spight and indis-cretion : and embrace a kinde of debating, teasty, headlong, malicious and imperious, whereat I afterward blush. It is impossible to treate quietly and dispute orderly with a foole. My judgement is not onely corrupted under the hand of so im-perious a maister, but my conscience also. Our disputations ought to be forbidden and punished,

The quarrelling of fools as other verball crimes. What vice raise they not, and heape up together, being ever swayed and commanded by choller? First we enter into enmity with the reasons, and then with the men. We learne not to dispute, except it be to contradict: and every man contradicting and being contradicted, it commonly followeth, that the fruit of disputing, is to loose and to disanull the trueth. So Plato in his common wealth, forbiddeth foolish, unapt and base-minded spirits, to undertake that exercise. To what purpose goe you about to quest or enquire that which is with him, who hath neither good pace nor proceeding of woorth? No man wrongs the subject, when he quits the same, for want of meanes to treat or mannage it. I meane not a scholasticall and artist meane, but intend a naturall meane, and of a sound understanding. What will the end be? one goeth Eastward, and another Westward: They loose the principall, and stray it in the throng of incidents. At the end of an houres wrangling, they wot not what they seeke for: one is high, another low, and another wide. Some take hold of a word, some of a similitude. Some forget what was objected against them, so much are they engaged in the pursuite and thinke to follow themselves, and not you: Some finding themselves weake-backt, feare all, refuse all, and at the very entrance mingle the subject and confound the purpose: or in the heate of the disputation, mutinie to hold their peace altogether: through a spightfull ignorance, affecting a proud kinde of contempt, or a foolish modesty avoyding of contention. Provided that one strike and hit, he careth not how open he lye. Another compteth his words, and wayeth them for reasons; Another employeth nothing but the advantage of his voyce and winde. Here one concludeth against himselfe; here another wearyeth you with idle prefaces, and frivolous digressions. Another armeth himselfe afore hand with injuries, and seekes after a Dutch quarrell, to rid himselfe of the society, and shake off the conference of a spirit, that presseth and overbeareth his. This last hath no insight at all in reason, but still be-leagreth you with the dialecticall or logicall close of his clause, and ties you to the rule of his arte or forme of his skill. Now who doth not enter into distrust of sciences, and is not in doubt, whether in any necessity of life he may reape solid fruit of them; if he consider the use we have of them? Nihil sanantibus literis. Since learning doth not cure. Who hath learnt any wit or understanding in Logique? Where are her faire promises? Nec ad melius vivendum, nec ad commodius disserendum. Nether to live better or to dispute fitter. Shall a man heare more brabbling or confusion in the tittle tattle of fish wives or scoulding sluts, then in the publike disputations of men of this profession? I had rather my child should learne to speake in a Taverne, then in the schooles of well-speaking Art. Take you a maister of arts, and conferre with him, why doth hee not make us perceive his artificiall excellency, and by the admiration of his reasons-constancy, or with the beauty of his quaint order,

Vanity of logic

Danger
of book-ishness

and grace of his method, ravish silly women, and bleare ignorant men as we are? Why doth he not sway, winde and perswade us as hee list? Why should one so advantageous in matter and conduct, entermixe injuries, indiscretion and chollericke rage with his fence? Let him pull of his twofaced hooede, his gowne and his latine, let him not fill our eares with meerely beleaved Aristotle, you will discover and take him for one of us, and worse if may be. Me thinks this implication and entangling of speech, wherewith they doe so much importune us, may fitly be compared unto juglers play of fast and loose: their nimblenesse combats and forceth our sences, but it nothing shaketh our beliefe: Take away their jugling, what they doe is but base, common and slight. Though they be more witty and nimble spirited, they are not the lesse foolish, simple and unapt. I love wit, and honour wisdom, as much as them that have it. And beeing rightly used, it is the noblest, the most forcible, yea and richest purchase men can make. But in such (of which kinde the number is infinit) that upon it establish their fundamentall sufficiency and worth: that from their wit refer themselves to their memory, sub aliena umbra latentes: reposing them under another mans protection; and can do nothing but by the booke (if I may be bold to say so) I hate the same, a little more then sotishnes. In my country, and in my dayes, learning and bookishnes, doth much mend purses, but minds nothing at all. If it chance to finde them empty, light and dry, it filleth, it over-burthens and swelleth them: a raw and indigested masse: if thinne, it doth easily purifie, clarifie, extenuate

 and subtilize them even unto exinanition or evacuation. It is a thing of a quality very neare indifferent: a most profitable accessory or ornament unto a wel borne mind, but pernicious and hurtfully damageable unto any other. Or rather a thing of most precious use, that will not basely be gotten, nor vily possessed. In some hands a royall scepter, in other some a rude mattocke.
 But let us proceed. What greater or more glorious victory can you expect, then teach your enemy, that hee cannot withstand you? When you gaine the advantage of your proposition, it is Truth that winneth: when you get the advantage of the order and conduct, it is you that winne. I am of opinion, that both in Plato and in Xenophon, Socrates disputeth more in favour of the dis-puters, then in grace of the disputation: and more to instruct Euthydemus and Protagoras with the knowledge of their impertinency, [then with the impertinency] of their art. He takes hold of the first matter, as he who hath a more profitable end, then to cleare it; that is, to cleare the spirits he undertaketh to manage and to exercise. Agitation, stirring and hunting is properly belonging to our subject or drift; wee are not excusable to conduct the same ill and impertinently, but to misse the game, and faile in taking, that's another matter. For wee are borne to quest and seeke after truth; to possesse it belongs to a greater power.
 It is not (as Democritus said) hidden in the deepes
 of abisse: but rather elevated in infinite height of

The eternal search after truth

Manner
and matter : form
and substance

divine knowledge. The world is but a Schoole of inquisition. The matter is not who shall put in, but who shall runne the fairest courses. As well may hee play the foole that speaketh truely, as hee that speaketh falsely : for wee are upon the manner, and not upon the matter of speaking. My humour is, to have as great a regard to the forme, as to the substance ; as much respect to the Advocat, as to the cause ; as Alcibiades appointed we should doe. And I dayly amuse my selfe to read in authors, without care of their learning : therein seeking their manner, not their subject. Even as I pursue the communication of some famous wit, not that he should teach me, but that I may know him ; and knowing him (if he deserve it) I may imitate him. Every one may speake truely, but to speake orderly, methodically, wisely and sufficiently, few can doe it. So falsehood proceeding of ignorance doth not offend mee ; ineptnesse and trifling doth. I have broken off divers bargaines, that would have beene very commodious unto me, by the impertinency of their contestation, with whom I did bargain. I am not mooved once a yeare, with the faults or oversights of those, over whom I have power : but touching the point of the sottishnesse and foolishnes of their allegations, excuses, and defences, rude and brutish, we are every day ready to goe by the eares. They neither understand what is said nor wherefore, and even so they answer ; a thing able to make one despaire. I feele not my head to shooke hard but by being hit with another.

And I rather enter into composition with my peoples vices, then with their rashnesse, impotunity and foolishnesse. Let them doe lesse, provided they be capable to doe. You live in hope to enflame their will: But of a blocke there is nothing to be hoped for, nor any thing of worth to bee enjoyed. Now, what if I take things otherwise then they are? So it may bee: And therefore I accuse my impatience. And first I hould, that it is equally vicious in him, who is in the right, as in him, that is in the wrong: For, it is ever a kinde of tyrannicall sharpenesse, not to be able to endure a forme different from his: and verily, since there is not a greater fondnesse, a more constant gullishnesse, or more heteroclite insipidity then for one to move or vex himselfe at the fondnesse, at the gullishnesse, or insipidity of the world: For it principally formalizeth and moveth us against our selves: and that Philosopher of former ages should never have wanted occasion to weepe, so long as he had considered himselfe. Miso, one of the seaven sages (a man of a Timonian disposition and Democraticall humour) being demanded, where-at he laughed alone; he answered, because I laugh alone; How many follies doe I speake and answer every day, according to my selfe; and then how much more frequent according to others? And if I bite mine owne lips at them, what ought others to doe? In fine, wee must live with the quicke, and let the water runne under the bridge, without any care, or at least without alteration to us. In good sooth,

The sin
of impatience

The mote and the beam why meet we sometimes with crooked, deformed, and in body mishapen men, without falling into rage and discontent, and cannot endure to light-upon a froward, skittish, and ill-ranged spirit, without falling into anger and vexation? This vicious austerity is rather in the Judge, then in the fault. Let us ever have that saying of Plato in our mouthes: What I finde unwholsome, is it not to be unhealthy my selfe? Am not I in fault my selfe? May not mine owne advertisement be retorted against my selfe? Oh wise and divine restraint, that curbeth the most universall and common error of men: Not onely the reproches, wee doe one to another, but our reasons, our arguments and matter controverted, are ordinarily retortable unto us: and wee pinch our selves up in our owne armes. Whereof antiquity hath left me divers grave examples. It was ingeniously spoken and fit to the purpose, by him that first devised the same.

Stercus cuique suum bene olet.

—ERAS. Chil. iii. cent. iv. ad. 2.

Ev'ry mans ordure well, To his owne sense doth smell.

Our eyes see nothing backward. A hundred times a day we mocke our selves, upon our neighbours subject, and detest some defects in others, that are much more apparant in us; yea and admire them with a strange impudency and unheedinesse. Even yesterday, I chanced to see a man of reasonable understanding, who no lesse pleasantly then justly flouted at anothers fond fashion, and yet upon every silly occasion doth nothing but molest all men with the impertinent bedrowle and register of his pedigrees, genealogies and alliances, more then halfe false and wrested in; (for it is the manner of such people, commonly to undertake such foolish discourses, whose qualities are more doubtfull and lesse sure) who if he had impartially considered and looked upon himselfe, should doubtlesse have found himselfe no lesse intemperate, indiscreet, and tedious, in publishing and extolling the prerogative of his wives pedigree and descent. Oh importunate presumption, wherewith the wife seeth her selfe armed by the hands of her own husband. If he understand Latin, a man should say to him,

The
office of charity

Age si hæc non insanit satis sua sponte, instiga.

—TER. And. act. iv. sc. 2

Goe too, if of her owne accord before,
She were not mad enough, provoke her more.

I say not, that none should accuse, except hee bee spotlesse in himselfe: For then none might accuse: no not spotlesse in the same kinde of fault. But my meaning is, that our judgement charging and blaming another, of whom there is then question, spareth us nothing, of an inward and severe jurisdiction. It is an office of charity, that he who cannot remove a vice from himselfe, should neverthesse endeavour to remove it from others, where it may have a lesse hurtfull and froward seed. Nor doe I deeme it a fit answer, for him that warneth me of my fault, to say, the same is likewise in him. But what of that? Well

External influences meaning warning is alwayes true and profitable.
 Had we a good and sound nose, our owne ordure should be more unsavory unto our selves, forasmuch as it is our owne. And Socrates is of opinion, that he, who should find himselfe, and his son, and a stranger guilty of any violence or injury, ought first begin by himselfe, and present himselfe to the sentence and condemnation of the law, and for his owne discharge and acquittal implore the assistance of the executioners hand : secondly for his son, and lastly for the stranger : If this precept take his tune somewhat too high : it should at lest be first presented to the punishment of ones owne conscience. Our senses are our proper and first judges, who distinguish not things, but by externall accidentis ; and no marvell, if in all parts of the service belonging to our society, there is so perpetuall and universall commixture of ceremonies and superficial apparances : so that the best and most effectual part of policies, consists in that. It is man with whom we have alwayes to doe, whose condition is marvellously corporall. Let those, who in these latter dayes have so earnestly laboured, to frame and establish unto us, an exercise of Religion and Service of God, so contemplative and immateriall, wonder nothing at all, if some be found, who thinke, it would have escaped and moultered away betweene their fingers, if it had not held and continued amongst us, as a marke, a title and instrument of division and faction, more then by it selfe. As in conference : The gravity, the gowne and the fortune of him that speaketh, doth often adde and winne credit unto vaine, trifling and absurd discourses. It is not to bee presumed, that one of these gowne-Clarkes or quoifed Serjants, so followed, and so redoubted, have not some sufficiency within him, more then popular: and that a man so sullen so grim and so disdainfull, to whom so many commissions, charges and authorities are given, be not more sufficient and worthy, then another, who saluteth and vaileth to him so farre-off, and whom no man employeth. Not onely the words, but the powtings of such people, are considered and registred, every one applying himselfe to give them some notable and solide interpretation. If they stoope to common conference, and that a man affoord or shew them other then reverence and approbation, they overthrow you with the authority of their experience: they have read, they have heard, seene and done goodly things, you are cleane overwhelmed with examples. I would faine tell them, that the fruit of a Chirur-gions experience, is not the story of his practises, or the remembrance that hee hath cured foure who had the Plague, and healed as many that had the Goute, except hee know and have the wit, from his use and experience, to draw a methode how to frame his judgements and by his skill and practise make us perceave, hee is become wiser in his art. As in a consort of instruments, one heares not severally a Lute, a Vyol, a Flute, or a paire of Virginalles, but a perfect-full harmony: the assembly and fruit of all those instruments in one. If their travels and charges of influences

The sum

Montaigne's
hatred of tyranny

have amended them, it is in the production of their understanding to make it appeare. It sufficeth not to number the experiments; they ought to bee well poised and orderly sorted: and to extract the reasons and conclusions they containe, they should be well digested and thorowly distilled. There were never so many Historians. It is ever good and profitable to heare them: for out of the magazin of their memory, they store us with divers good instructions and commendable documents. Verily a chiefe part, for the assistance of our life. But now a dayes wee seeke not after that, but rather whether the Collectors and reporters of them be praise worthy and directing themselves. I hate al manner of tyranny, both verball and effectuall. I willingly band and oppose my selfe against these vaine and frivolous circumstances, which by the senses delude our judgement; and holding my selfe aloofe of from these extraordinary greatnesses, have found, that for the most part, they are but men as others be:

Rarus enim fermè sensus communis in illa Fortuna.—JUVEN. Sat. viii. 73.

For common sense is seldome found
In fortunes that so much abound.

They are peradventure esteemed and discerned lesse then they bee, forsomuch as they undertake more, and so shew themselves; they answer not the charge they have taken. There must necessarily be more vigour and strength in the bearer, then in the burden. He who is not growne to his full strength, leaves you to ghesse, whether he have any left him beyond that, or have beene tried to the utmost of his power. He who fainteth under his burden, bewrayeth his measure and the weaknesse of his shoulders. Thats the reason, why amongst the wiser sort, there are so many foolish and unapt minds seene, and more then of others. They might happily have beene made good husbandmen, thriving merchants, and plodding artificers. Their naturall vigour was cut out to this proportion. Learning is a matter of great consequence: they faint under it. To en-

Learning is not fit for all men stall and distribute, so rich and so powerfull a matter, and availefully to employ the same, their wit hath neither sufficient vigour, nor conduct enough to manage it. It hath no prevailing vertue but in a strong nature; and they are very rare: and such as are but weake (saith Socrates) corrupt and spoilingly deface the dignity of Philosophy, in handling the same. She seemeth faulty and unprofitable, being ill placed and unorderedly disposed. Loe how they spoyle and entangle themselves.

*Humani qualis simulator simius oris,
 Quem puer arridens, pretioso stamine serum
 Velavit, nudasque nates ac terga reliquit,
 Ludibrium mensis.*—CLAUD. Eutrop. i. 303.

Such counterfets as Apes are of mans face,
 Whom children sporting at, featly incase
 In costly coates, but leave his backside bare
 For men to laugh at, when they feasting are.

To those likewise, who sway and command us,
 and have the world in their owne hands, 'tis not

An unlucky speech

sufficient to have a common understanding, and to be able to doe, what we can effect. They are farre beneath us, if they be not much above us. As they promise more, so owe they more. And therefore silence is in them, not onely a countenance of respect and gravitie, but often of thrift and profit: Megabysus going to visite Apelles in his worke-house, stood still a good while without speaking one word, and then began to discourse of his workes. Of whom he received this rude and nipping check : So long as thou heldest thy peace, by reason of thy garish clothes, goodly chaines and stately pompe, thou seemedst to be some worthy gallant : but now thou hast spoken, there is not the simplest boy of my shop, but scorneth and contemns thee. That great state of his, those rich habilliments, and goodly traine, did not permit him to be ignorant with a popular ignorance, and to speake impertinently of painting. He should have kept mute, and concealed his externall and presuming sufficiency. Unto how many fond and shallow minds, hath in my dayes, a sullen, cold and silent countenance, served as a title of wisdom and capacity? Dignities, charges and places, are necessarily given, more by fortune then by merit : and they are often to blame, that for it lay the blame on Kings. Contrariwise it is a wonder, that being so untoward, they should therein have so good lucke : Principis est virtus maxima, nosse suos. Chiefe vertue it is knowne, In Kings to know their owne. For Nature hath not given them so perfect a sight, that it might extend it selfe and overlooke so many people, to discerne their pre-excellency ; Irony of fortune and enter their breasts, where lodgeth the knowledge of our will and better worth. It is by conjectures, and as it were groping they must try us : by our race, alliances, dependences, riches, learning, and the peoples voice : all over-

 weake arguments. He that could devise a meane,
how men might be judged by law, chosen by reason,
and advanced by desert, should establish a perfect forme of a commonwealth. Yea but hee hath brought that great businesse unto a good passe.
 It is to say something : but not to say sufficiently.
 For, this sentence is justly received, That coun- sels ought not to be judged by the events. The Carthaginians were wont to punish the ill counsels of their Captaines, although corrected by some fortunate successe. And the Roman people hath often refused triumphes to famous, succes-full, and most profitable victories, forsomuch as the Generals conduct, answered not his good fortune. It is commonly perceived by the worlds actions, that fortune, to teach us, how farre hir
 power extendeth unto all things ; and who taketh
 pleasure to abate our presumption, having not beene
 able to make silly men wise, she hath made them fortunate, in envy of vertue : And commonly gives hir selfe to favour executions, when as their com-plot and devise is meerly hers. Whence we dayly
 see, that the simplest amongst us, compasse divers great and important affaires, both publike and private. And as Sirannez the Persian Prince, answered those, who seemed to wonder how his negotiations succeeded so ill, his discourses being

Most things are made by themselves so wise : That he was onely maister of his discourses, but fortune mistris of his affaires successe. These may answer the like ; but with a contrary bias. Most things of the world are made by themselves.

Fata viam inveniunt.—VIR. Æn. iii. 356.

Fates finde and know, which way to goe.

The issue doth often authorize a simple conduct. Our interposition is in a manner nothing els but an experience, and more commonly a consideration of use and example then of reason. And as one amazed at the greatnesse of some businesse, I have sometimes understood by those who had atchieved them, both their motives and addresses : wherein I have found but vulgar advises : and the most vulgar and used, are peradventure the surest and most commodious for the practise, if not for the shew. And what if the plainest reasons are the best seated : the meanest, basest and most beaten, are best applied unto affaires ? To maintaine the authority of our Kings counsell, it is not requisite, that prophane persons should be partakers of it, and looke further into it, then from the first barre. To uphold it's reputation, it should be revered upon credit, and at full. My consultation doth somewhat roughly hew the matter, and by it's first shew, lightly consider the same : the maine and chiefe point of the worke, I am wont to resigne to heaven.

Permitte divis cætera.—HOR. i. Od. ix. 9.

How all the [rest] shall goe,
Give leave to Gods to know.

Good and bad fortune, are in my conceit two soveraigne powers. 'Tis folly to thinke, that humane wisdomē may act the full part of fortune. And vaine is his enterprise, that presumeth to embrace both causes and consequences,
 and lead the progresse of his fact by the hand.
 And above all, vainest in military deliberations.
 There was never more circumspection and military wisdomē, then is sometimes seene amongst us: May it be that man feareth to lose himselfe
 by the way, reserving himselfe to the catastrophe of that play? I say moreover, that even our wisdomē and consultation for the most part followeth the conduct of hazard. My will and my discourse, is sometimes mooved by one ayre,
 and sometimes by another: and there be many of these motions, that are governed without me.
 My reason hath dayly impulsions and casuall agitations:

The
 kingly
 powers of fortune

*Vertuntur species animorum, et pectora motus
 Nunc alios, alios dum nubila ventus agebat,
 Concipiunt.*—VIR. Geo. iv. 20.

The shoves of mindes are chang'd, and breasts con-ceave

At one time motions, which anon they leave,
 And others take againe, As winds drive clouds amaine.

Let but a man looke who are the mightiest in Cities and who thrive best in their businesse: he shall commonly find, they are the siliest and poorest in wit. It hath hapned to simple women, to weake children, and to mad men, to command
 great states, as well as the most sufficient Princes.

The wheel of fortune And the gullish or shallow-pated (saith Thucydides) doe more ordinarily come unto them, then the wisest and subtilest. We ascribe their good fortunes effects, unto their prudence.

—ut quisque fortuna utitur,
Ita præcellit: atque exinde sapere illum omnes dicimus.
 —PLAU. Pse. act. v. sc. 4.

As men their fortune use, so they excell,
 And so we say, they are wise and doe well.

Wherefore I say well, that howsoever, events are but weake testimonies of our worth and capacity. I was now upon this point, that we need but looke upon a man advanced to dignity; had we but three daies before knowne him to bee of little or no worth at all: an image of greatnesse, and an Idea of sufficiency, doth insensibly glide and creepe into our opinions; and we perswade our selves, that increasing in state, and credit, and followers, hee is also increased in merit. We judge of him, not according to his worth; but after the maner of casting-counters, according to the prerogative of his ranke. But let fortune turne her wheele, let him againe decline and come down amongst the vulgar multitude; every one with admiration enquireth of the cause, and how he was raised so high. Good Lord is that he? will some say. What? knew he no more? had he no other skill when he was so aloft? Are Princes pleased with so little? Now in good sooth we were in very good hands, will others say. It is a thing my selfe have often scene in my dayes. Yea the very maske of greatnesse, or habit of Majesty, represented in Tragedies, doth in some sort touch and beguile us. The thing I adore in Kings, is the throng of their adorators. All inclination and submission is due unto them, except the mindes. My reason is not framed to bend or stoope: my knees are. Melanthius being demanded, what he thought of Dionysius his tragedy, answered I have not seene it, so much was it over-clouded with language. So should those say, that judge of great mens discourses: I have not understood his discourse, so was it overdarkned with gravity, with greatnes and with Majesty. Antisthenes one day perswaded the Athenians, to command that their asses should as well be employed about the manuring of grounds, as were their horses: who answered him that the asse was not borne for such service: That's all one (quoth he) there needs but your allowance for it: for the most ignorant and incapable men you imploy about the directing of your warres, leave not to become out of hand most worthy, onely because you employ them. Whereupon depends the custome of so many men, who canonize the King, whom they have made amongst them, and are not contented to honor him, unlesse they also adore him. Those of Mexico, after the ceremonies of his consecration are finished, dare no more looke him in the face: but as if by his Royalty, they had deified him, they afterward deeme him to bee a God: amongst the oathes, they make him sweare to maintaine their Religion, to keepe their Lawes, to defend their liberties, to be valiant, just

Deifica-
tion of kings

An overbearing
attitude and debonaire; he is also sworne to make the Sun march in his accustomed light: in time of need to cause the clouds showre downe their waters; to enforce rivers to runne in their right wonted chanel; and compell the earth to produce all necessary things for his people. I differ from this common fashion, and more distrust sufficiency, when I see it accompanied with the greatnes of fortune, and applauded by popular commendation. Wee should heedfully marke, of what consequence it is, for a man to speake in due time, to choose fit opportunity, to breake or change his discourse with a magistrale authority: to defend himselfe from others oppositions, by a nod or moving of the head, by a smile, a shrug or a silence, before an assembly, trembling with reverence and respect. A man of monstrous fortune, chancing to shoote his boulte, and give his opinion upon a frivolous subject, which but jestingly was tossed too and fro at his table, began ever thus; he cannot choose but be a lyer, or an ignorant asse, that will say otherwise then, etc. Follow this Philosophicall point, out commeth a dagger, and there is some mischief. Loe here another advertisement; from whence I reape good use: Which is, that in disputations and conferences, all good seeming words, ought not presently to be allowed and accepted. Most men are rich of a strange sufficiency. Some may chance to speake a notable saying, to give a good answere, to use a witty sentence, and to propound it, without knowing the force of it. That a man holdeth not all he borroweth, may peradventure be verified in my selfe. A man should not alwayes yeeld, what truth or goodnes soever it seemeth to containe. A man must either combat the same in good earnest, or draw back, under colour of not understanding the matter: to try on all parts, how it is placed in it's author. It may fortune, that we shut our selves up and further the stroake, beyond its bearing. I have sometimes in necessity and throng of the combat, employed some revira-does or turnings, which beyond my intent, have proved false offers. I but gave them by tale, and they were received by waight. Even as when I contend with a vigorous man; I please my selfe to anticipate his conclusions: I ease him the labour to interpret himselfe, I endeavour to prevent his imperfect and yet budding imagination: the order and pertinency of his understanding forwarneth and menaceth a farre off: of these others I do cleane contrary; a man must understand or presuppose nothing but by them. If they judge in generall termes: This is good, that's naught: and that they jump right; see whether it be fortune, that jumpeth for them. Let them a little circumscribe and restraints their sentence wherefore it is, and which way it is. These universall judgements, I see so ordinarily say nothing at all. They are men, that salute a whole multitude, in throng and troupe. Such as have true knowledge of the same, salute and marke it by name and particularly. But it is a hazardous enterprise. Whence I have oftner [then] daily seene, to happen, that wits weakly methods

Divers
in discussion

The speech of fools grounded, intending to shew themselves ingenious, by observing in the reading of some work, the point of beauty: stay their admiration with so bad a choise, that in lieu of teaching us the authors excellency, they shew us their owne ignorance. This maner of exclamation is safe: Loe this is very excellent: Surely this is very good, having heard a whole page of Virgil. And that's the shift whereby the subtill save themselves. But to undertake to follow him by shrugs and crinches, and with an expresse selected judgement to goe about to marke which way a good author surmounteth himselfe: pondring his words, his phrases, his inventions, and his severall vertues one after another: Away, goe by: It is not for you. Videndum est non modo, quid quisque, loquatur, sed etiam quid quisque sentiat, atque etiam qua de causa quisque sentiat. Man must take heed not onely what he speakes, but what he thinkes, and also why he thinkes. I dayly heare fooles utter unfoolish words. Speake they any good thing: let us understand whence they know it, how farre they understand and whereby they hold it. Wee helpe them to employ this fine word and this goodly reason, which they possesse not, and have but in keeping: they have happily produced the same by chance and at randan, our selves bring it in credit and esteeme with them. You lend them your hand: what to doe? [They] konne you no thanks, and thereby become more simple, and more foolish. Doe not second them: let them goe-on: they will handle this matter as men affraid to bewray themselves, they dare neither change her seate or light, nor enter into it. Shake it never so little, it escapeth them; [they] quit the same how strong and goodly soever it be. They are handsome weapons, but ill hafted. How often have I seene the experience of it? Now if you come to expound and confirme them, they take hold of you, and presently steale the advantage of your interpretation from you. It was that which I was about to say: It was just my conceit: If I have not so exprest it, it is but for want of speech. Handy-dandy, what is this? Malice it selfe must be employed to correct this fierce rudenesse. Hege-sias his position, that a man must neither hate nor accuse, but instruct, hath some reason else where. But here, it is injustice to assist, and inhumanity to raise him up againe, that hath nothing to doe with it, and is thereby of lesser worth. I love to have them entangle and bemire themselves more then they are, and if it be possible, to wade so deepe into the gulfes of error, that in the end they may recall and advise themselves. Sottishnesse and distraction of the senses, is no disease curable by a tricke of advertisement. And we may fitly say of this reparation, as Cyrus answered one, who urged him to exhort his army in the nicke when the battell should begin: That men are not made warlike and couragious in the field, by an excellent oration; no more then one becommeth a ready cunning Musition, by hearing a good song. They are prentisages that must be learned a forehand, by not taught by words

Wisdom

Obstinanacy an evidence of folly

long and constant institution. This care we owe to ours, and this assiduity of correction and instruction: but to preach to him that first passeth by, or sway the ignorance or fondnesse of him we meete next, is a custome I cannot well away with. I seldome use it, even in such discourses as are made to me; and I rather quit all, then come to these far-fetcht and magistrale instructions. My humour is no more proper to speake, then to write, namely for beginners. But in things commonly spoken, or amongst others, how false and absurd soever I judge them, I never crosse or gibe them, neither by word nor signe. Further, nothing doth more spight me in sottishnesse then that it pleaseth it selfe more, then any reason may justly bee satisfied. It is ill lucke that wisdom forbids you to please and trust your selfe, and sends you alwayes away discontented and fearefull: whereas wilfulnesse and rashnesse, fill their guests with gratulation and assurance. It is for the simplest and least able, to looke at other men over their shoulders, ever returning from the combat full of glory and gladnesse. And most often also, this outrecuidance of speech and cheerefulnesse of countenance, giveth them the victory over the by-standers, who are commonly weake, and incapable to judge a right and discern true advantage. Obstinacy and earnestnesse in opinion, is the surest tryall of folly and selfe conceit. Is there any thing so assured, so resolute, so disdainfull, so contemplative, so serious and so grave, as the Asse: May we not commixe with the title of conference and communication, the sharpe and interrupted discourses, which mirth and familiarity introduceth amongst friends, pleasantly dallying and wittily jesting one with another? An exercise, to which my naturall blithnesse makes me very apt. And if it be not so wire-drawne and serious, as this other exercise I now speake of, yet is it no lesse sharpe or ingenious, no lesse profitable, as it seemed to Lycurgus. For my regard I bring more liberty then wit unto it, and have therin more lucke then invention: but I am perfect in sufferance; for I endure the revenge, not onely sharpe but also indiscreete, without any alteration. And to any assault given me, if I have not presently or stoutly wherewith to worke mine owne amends, I amuse not my selfe to follow that ward or point, with a tedious and selfe-wil'd contestation, enclining to pertinacy: I let it passe, and hanging downe mine eares, remit my selfe to a better houre to right my selfe. He is not a marchant that ever gaineth. Most men change both voice and countenance, where might faileth them: And by an importunate rage, instead of avenging themselves, they accuse their weaknesse and therewith bewray their impacience. In this jollity we now and then harpe upon some secret strings of our imperfections; which settled or considerate we cannot touch without offence: and we profitably enter-advertize our selves of our defects. There are other handy-sports indiscreete, fond and sharpe, just after the French maner; which I hate mortally: I have a tender and sensible

Self-judgments rarely safe skinne: I have in my daies seene two Princes of our Royall blood brought to their graves for it. It is an ill seeming thing for men, in jest to hitte, or in sport to strike one another. In other matters, when I shall judge of any body, I demaund of him, how farre or how much he is contented with himselfe: how farre his speach or his worke pleaseth him. I will avoyd these goodly excuses, I did it but in jest:

Ablatum mediis opus est incudibus istud.

—OVID. Trist. i. Eleg. vi. 29.

This worke away was brought,
Halfe hammered, halfe wrought.

I was not an houre there: I have not seene him since. Now I say, let us then leave these partes, give me one that may represent you whole and entire, by which it may please you to be measured by another. And then; what finde you fairest in your owne worke? is it that or this part? the grace or the matter, the invention, the judgement, or the learning? For I ordinarily perceive, that a man misseth as much in judging of his owne worke, as of anothers. Not onely by the affection, he therein imployeth; but because he hath not sufficiencie to know, nor skill to distinguish it. The worke of it's owne power and fortune, may second the worke-man, and transport him beyond his invention and knowledge. As for me, I judge not the worth of anothers worke more obscurely then of mine owne: and place my Essayes sometime lowe, sometimes high, very uncon-stantly and doubtfully. There are divers bookes profitable by reason of their subjects of which the author reapeth no commendations at all:

And good bookes, as also good workes, which make the workeman ashamed. I shall write the manner of our bankets, and the fashion of our garments, and I shall write it with an ill
grace: I shall publish the Edicts of my time,
and the letters of Princes that publicly passe
from hand to hand: I shall make an abridgement of a good booke (and every abridgement of a good booke, is a foole abridged) which booke shall come to be lost, and such like things. Posterity shall reape singular profit by such compositions: but I, what honour except by my good fortune? Many famous bookes are of this condition.

When I read Philip de Commynes, (now divers yeares since) a right excellent author, I noted
this speech in him, as a saying not vulgar:
*That a man should carefully take heed, how he do his master so great or much service, that he thereby be hindred from finding his due recompence
for it.* I should have commended the invention,
but not him. After that I found it in Tacitus:
Beneficia eo usque lata sunt, dum videntur exolvi posse, ubi multum antevenere pro gratia odium red-ditur (CORN. TACIT. Annal. iv.). *Benefits are so long wel-come, as wee thinke they may be requited,
but when they much exceede all power of recom-
pence, hate is returned for thankes and good will.*

Mon-
taigne
condemns abridge-
ments

Bor- And Seneca very stoutly. Nam qui putat esse rowed turpe non reddere, non vult esse cui reddat (SEN. plumes Epist. lxxxii. f.). For he that thinkes it a shame not to requite, could wish, he were not whom he should requite. Q. Cicero with a looser byas :
Qui se non putat satisfacere, amicus esse nullo
modo potest (CICERO). He that thinkes he doth not satisfie, can by no meanes be a friend. The subject according as it is, may make a man be judged learned, wise and memorious : but to judge in him the parts most his owne and best worthy, together with the force and beautie of his minde ; tis very requisite we know first what is his owne, and what not : and in what is not his owne, what we are beholding to him for,
in consideration of his choise, disposition, ornament, and language he hath thereunto furnished.
What if he have borrowed the matter and em-paired the forme ? as many times it commeth to passe. Wee others that have little practise with bookes, are troubled with this, that when wee meet with any rare or quaint invention in a new Poet, or forcible argument in a Preacher,
we dare not yet commend them, untill we have taken instruction of some wise man, whether that part be their owne or another bodies.
And untill then I ever stand upon mine owne guard. I come lately from reading over, (and that without any intermission) the story of Tacitus (a matter not usuall with me ; it is now twenty yeares, I never spent one whole houre together upon a booke) and I have now
done it, at the instant request of a gentleman, whom France holdeth in high esteeme; as well for his owne worth and valour as for a constant forme of sufficiencie and goodnes, apparantly seene in divers brethren of his. I know no author, that in a publike register entermixeth so many considerations of manners, and particular inclinations. And I deeme cleane contrary, to what hee thinketh: who being especially to follow the lives of the Emperours of his time, so divers and extreme in all manner of forme, so many notable and great actions, which, namely their cruelty produced in their subjects: he had a more powerfull and attractive matter, to discourse and relate, then if hee had beene to speake or treat of battels and universall agitations. So that I often find him barren, sleightlie running-over those glorious deaths, as if he feared to attediate and molest us with their multitude and continuance. This forme of historie is much more profitable: Publike innovations, depend more on the conduct of fortune: private on ours. It is rather a judgement, then a deduction of an history: therein are more precepts, then narrations: It is not a booke to reade, but a volume to study and to learne: It is so fraught with sentences, that right or wrong they are huddled up: It is a seminary of morall, and a magazine of pollitique discourses, for the provision and ornament of those, that possesse some place in the managing of the world. He ever pleadeth with solid and forcible reasons; after a sharpe and witty fashion: following affected and laboured stile of his age: They so much loved excellence of Tacitus

The

Mon-
taigne's
criticism

to raise and puffe themselves up, that where they found neither sharpenesse nor subtilty in things, they would borrow it of wordes. He draweth somewhat neare to Senecas writing. I deeme Tacitus, more sinnowy, Seneca more sharpe. His service is more proper to a crazed troubled state, as is ours at this present: you would often say, he pourtrayeth and toucheth us to the quicke. Such as doubt of his faith, doe manifestly accuse themselves to hate him for somewhat else. His opinions be sound, and enclining to the better side of the Romane affaires. I am neverthesse something greeved, that he hath more bitterly judged of Pompey, then honest mens opinions, who lived and conversed with him, doe well allow off: to have esteemed him altogether equall to Marius and Silla, saving that he was more close and secret. His intention and canvassing for the government of affaires, hath not beene exempted from ambition, nor cleared from revenge: and his owne friends have feared, that had he gotten the victory, it would have transported him beyond the limits of reason; but not unto an unbridled and raging measure. There is nothing in his life that hath threatned us with so manyfest a cruelty, and expresse tyranny. Yet must not the suspition be counterpoised to the evidence: So doe not I beleeeve him.

That his narrations are naturall and right, might happily be argued by this: That they doe not alwaies exactly apply themselves to the conclusions of his judgement; which hee pursueth according to the course he hath taken, often beyond the matter he sheweth us ; which of Tacitus he hath dained to stoope unto with one onely glance. He needeth no excuse to have approoved the religion of his times, according to the lawes which commanded him, and beene ignorant of the true and perfect worship of God. That's his ill fortune, not his defect. I have principally considered his judgement, whereof I am not every where throughly resolved. As namely these words contayned in the letter, which Tiberius being sicke and aged, sent to the Senate. What shall I write to you my masters, or how shall I write to you, or what shall I not write to you in these times ? May the gods and goddesses loose me worse, then I dayly feele my selfe to perish, if I can tell. I cannot perceive why he should so certainly apply them unto a stinging remorse, tormenting the conscience of Tiberius: At least when my selfe was in the same plight, I saw it not. That hath likewise seemed somewhat demisse and base unto me, that having said, how he had exercised a certaine honourable magistracy in Rome, he goeth about to excuse himselfe, that it is not for ostentation, he spake it : This one trick, namely in a minde of his quality, seemeth but base and course unto me : For, not to dare speake roundly of himselfe, accuseth some want of courage : A constant, resolute and high judgement, and which judgeth soundly and surely, every hand while useth his owne examples, as well as of any strange thing ; and witnesseth as freely of himselfe as of a third person : A detachment

Self-

man must overgoe these populare reasons of civility, in favour of truth and liberty. I dare not onely speake of my selfe: but speake alone of my selfe. I stragle when I write of any other matter, and digresse from my subject. I doe not so [in]discreetly love my selfe, and am [not] so tied and commixt to my selfe, as that I can not distinguish and consider my selfe a part: as a neighbour, as a tree; it is an equall error, either not to see how farre a mans worth stretcheth, or to say more of it then one seeth good cause. We owe more love to God, then to our selves, and know him lesse, and yet we talke our fill of him. If his writings relate any thing of his conditions he was a notable man, upright and couragious, not with a superstitious vertue, but Philosophicall and generous: He may be found over-hardy in his testimonies. As where he holdeth, that a souldier carrying a burden of wood, his hands were so stifly benumbed with cold that they stucke to his wood, and remained so fast unto it, that as dead flesh they were divided from his armes. In such cases I am wont to yeeld unto the authority of so great testimonies. Where he also saith, that Vespasian by the favour of the God Serapis, healed in the citie of Alexandria a blinde woman, with the rubbing and anointing her eyes with fasting spettle, and some other miracles, which I remember not well now, he doth it by the example and devoire of all good historians. They keepe a register of important events: among publike accidents, are allso popular reports and vulgar opinions. It is their part to relate common conceits, but not to sway them. This part belongeth to Divines and Philosophers, directors of consciences. Therefore that companion of his, and as great a man as hee, said most wisely: Equidem plura transcribo quam credo: Nam nec affirmare sustineo, de quibus dubito, nec sub ducere quæ accepi: I write out more then I beleeve: for neither can I abide to affirm what I doubt of, nor to withdrawe what I have heard: And that other: Hæc neque affirmare neque refellere operæ precium est: famæ rerum standum est. It is not worth the talke, or to avouch, or to refuse these things wee must stand to report. And writing in an age, wherein the beliefe of prodigies began to decline, he saith, he would notwithstanding not omit to insert in his Annals, and give footing to a thing received and allowed of so many honest men, and with so great reverence by antiquity. It is very well said: That they yeelde us the history, more according as they receive, then according as they esteeme it. I who am king of the matter I treat of, and am not to give accompt of it to any creature living, doe neverthelesse not altogether beleeve my selfe for it. I often hazard upon certaine outslips of my minde, for which I distrust my selfe; and certaine verball wiliebeguilies, whereat I shake mine eares: but I let them runne at hab or nab; I see some honour them selves with such like things: 'Tis not for me alone to judge of them. I present my selfe standing and lying, before and behinde, on the right and left side, and in

I am king
of the matter I treat of

All judgments imperfect all by naturall motions. Spirits alike in force, are not ever alike in application and taste. Loe here what my memory doth in grose, and yet very uncertainly present unto me of it. In breefe, all judgments are weake, demisse and imperfect.

The present issue of Florio's translation of "Montaigne's ESSAYS" has been edited by Mr. A. R. Waller, who has revised the text, and added the Marginalia, Glossary, and Notes.

I. G.

August 2nd, 1897.

NOTES

Frontispiece.—The photogravure is a reproduction of the portrait of Florio contained in his "Queen Anna's New World of Words," 1611.

Texts.—The three Folios of Florio are indicated in the Notes thus: A = 1603; B = 1613; C = 1632.
M = Montaigne.

Page

2. admit, A and B; admire, C.
3. hardy Citizens, the most vigorous and least fearful Citizens.
4. our Princes, the King of Navarre (afterwards Henry IV.) and the Duke de Guise.—Le Clerc.
5. his particular game: his = the action's.
5. All lawfull . . . temperate, All lawful and equitable intentions are of themselves equable and temperate.
9. and, A and B; an, C.
11. raport, A and B; report, C.
11. backe, A and B; bcake, C.
13. Rolles . . . Pallace, Law Courts and lawsuits.
14. After "forswear my selfe" add "for some notable service."
15. l. 2. After "obedience" add "and servitude."
17. use of, A and B; use of of, C.
18. their owne, i.e., their own parricide.
18. guiltlesse, A; guitlesse, B and C.
20. an act so different, an act so singular.
20. on their considerations, upon the considerations of third parties.
25. to our races, i.e., to the production of our races.
29. joying, A; joyning, B and C.
34. generous, general.
36. ult. After "reformations" add "arbitrary."
38. the knowledge he hath, the knowledge he alone hath.
40. No colon is needed after "Devotion."
40. gentle and stately, easy and showy [or beguiling].

Page

40. conformed, A and B; confirmed, C.
41. that, A and B; this, C.
41. a hundred yeares, a thousand years.
42. beate, A and B; beare, C.
43. l. 1. After "instruction" add "of information."
43. from their contentions, from being responsible for them.
45. I be-calme them, I conjure them to retire.—Coste.
46. Omit "not" before "by reinforcement," and, on the next line, alter "nor" into "not"; "par reinforcement de nostre raison, non par," etc., M.
47. for, is, A and B; is, for, C.
47. entitle, A and B; entitle, C.
49. cannot amuse, cannot ordinarily amuse.
49. bent, combined together; "bandee," M.
49. After "Bookes are" add "with respect to it."
50. possesse mee, possess and occupy me.
51. l. 2. After "committed" add "truly."
51. No full stop is needed after "insipience."
51. and both . . . people, both public and private affairs are concerned with such people.
51. conversation, A and B; conversion, C.
52. much, A and B; omitted in C.
52. No full stop is needed at "humour."
53. besides my reason. M. refers to the reasons given at the beginning of the paragraph.
53. indifferent, equitable.
54. The semicolon after "aside" should be advanced to the end of "employments," three words farther on.
54. if, A and B; omitted in C.
55. affected, A and B; effected, C.
57. Omit "great" before "part of my life."
59. keepe from us at that time, accommodate herself to us.—Coste.
60. faire then foule, foul than fair.
61. to thinke well of her selfe. Not in M.
62. l. 1. people, A and B; pople, C.
63. These two commences, i.e., that with men by discourse and that with women by love.—Coste.
66. passe, A and B; past C.
66. legges, A and B; ledges, C.
69. l. 3. discourses, mournings.
70. vaine, ? vein (or hand, "main," M.).

Page

73. out of the thing, i.e., outside of the thing.
77. strooke, A and B; stroke, C.
80. his childehood, her childhood.
81. l. 2. After "grammaticall" add "and vocal."
81. griefe to lose my life, regret of life.
82. l. 1. coumpted (= counted or considered), A; corrupted, B and C.
83. he had found himselfe, he had entered into it so far as to have found himself.
83. the women . . . as Martin: "say . . . breath" is not in M.; supply instead "do." The story is that a certain Priest named Martin acted as Priest and Server at Mass.
84. The quotation beginning "The interest" ends at "in the matter."
85. Heare, A and B; Here, C.
87. his turne: his = the body's.
87. tarnish, A and B; I varnish, C.
88. comlinesse, A and B; comlines, C.
88. After "willeth them" add "in these recreations."
90. natationes, A and B; nationes, C.
91. absolute tranquillity, enjoyable tranquillity.
91. or, A; omitted in B and C.
91. renew and recover it selfe on, escape from.
91. let it bud, let it meanwhile bud.
92. afforded, A; offorded, B and C.
92. working . . . desperate, jocund . . . extravagant.
92. penult. truce, A and B; time, C.
93. conforme, A and B; comforme, C.
93. twrest . . . straine, criticise Plato's writings and glide lightly over.—E. Johanneau.
94. consciencs, A and B; consciences, C.
95. secrets, A and B; sectets, C.
95. can, A; cannot, B and C.
96. example, A and B; exam—, C.
96. that, A and B; omitted in C.
96. the, A; their, B and C.
98. least concealed, best concealed; "mieulx teus," M.
98. not to accuse, not even to accuse.
98. beate, A and B; beare, C.
99. Ceux, A; Deux, B and C.

Page

101. drowsie, grave.
104. After "command them to" add "step to."
105. l. 2. parents, relations.
105. would, A and B; wold, C.
105. master, mistress.
105. him then be demanded, A and B; them then be damned, C.
105. marriage, A and B; omitted in C.
106. spirits, A and B; sprits, C.
107. ton, A; omitted in B and C.
108. it was not possible, it was not impossible; "qu'il ne soit pas impossible," M.
111. Releasing, A and B; Releafing, C.
112. as their . . . penalty, and upon extreme and final penalties.
112. vowed, A and B; veiwed, C.
116. Before "lover" add "book of the."
120. law-giver. The "good-meaning man" referred to on the preceding page.
121. slit, A and B; slith, C.
121. After "attributed much" add "power of temptation."
122. trudging, A and B; trudding, C.
124. lure to wisdom, lure than wisdom.
125. his frontiers, his = honour's.
125. all things considered. Not in M.
127. forth, A; foorth, B; footh, C.
127. As for the other, i.e., jealousy.—Coste.
127. open gate, i.e., out of doors.
132. direct them, civilly deny them.
133. Besides, this allegation, etc. This clause refers to the sentence on the preceding page concerning those who "bragge to have so virgin-like a will."—A. Duval.
135. oppressed, A and B; expressed, C.
136. shrewd, rude.
136. this careful vexation, i.e., jealousy.—Coste.
138. l. 1. After "that" add "it."
140. inchantment. Plural in M.
140. they transferre, they willingly transfer.
140. most happy. End of the quotation that begins "every man."
140. pettie, A; petie, B and C.
142. insisting, resisting.—Coste.

Page

144. full conceptions, fine words, fine words, full conceptions.
 145. I will be able, I wished to be able.
 146. tarnished, A; tarnish, B and C.
 147. There let us leave, A; omitted in B and C. [Bembo and Equicola wrote treatises on love.—E. Johanneau.]
 148. ult. my, A and B; omitted in C.
 149. Whom I, i.e., He whom I.
 150. which often causeth, etc., designing thereby to cause, etc.
 150. these superficial impressions. This clause has reference to that on the preceding page, "I have more often beene heard," etc.—A. Duval.
 151. that good huswife. Not in M.
 152. no barrell better Hering. Not in M.
 153. devoureth, A; endevoureth, B and C.
 154. l. 1. After "circumcision" add "which perhaps is a punishment."
 154. consume, exterminate themselves.
 154. After "our dutie" add "bashfully."
 155. And a man, etc. This clause should be part of the sentence above beginning "I know."
 155. After "cannot endure" add "to witnes any one eat, nor that."
 155. fanaticall, A; fantastickall, B and C.
 155. by, A; omitted in B and C.
 156. without any arte, i.e., without being so by art.
 156. that she is idle, that she lacks somewhat and is idle.
 156. tie thee, occupy and tie thee.
 156. of the world, of God and the world.
 156. two Poets, Virgil and Lucretius.
 157. as these do, i.e., Virgil and Lucretius.
 159. refused, A; was refused, B and C.
 159. Things farre . . . Ladyes. Not in M.
 160. into foure parts. Not in M.
 160. foure faire ones, three fair ones.
 160. stitching up, i.e., enclosing in the winding-sheet.
 163. After "some liberty" add "We have nearly the same fortune: they are too extreme under constraint, we, in licence."
 163. After "discourtesie" add "and injury."
 164. her name, her reputation.—Coste.
 165. After "let us enter" add "Pati natæ, born to endure."

Page

166. the only valiant man, the most valiant man.
 166. of their action, i.e., of the action of women.
 166. It might, A; I might, B and C.
 166. I allow of, I confess the.
 167. l. 2. if constancy, if inconstancy.
 167. l. 5. against us, even as we.
 167. That action, etc. This sentence carries on the thought expressed in the sentence immediately preceding the story of the Queen of Naples.—A. Duval.
 167. in making triall of us, etc. These words should follow "happen otherwise," just before the incident from Plato.—A. Duval.
 167. antepen. that will, that the will.
 168. Why not, etc. Coste suggests that this sentence probably refers to the quotation from Catullus.
 168. and feare, A; omitted in B and C.
 168. wretched, A and B; wrethed, C.
 169. at the best, in the lurch.
 170. bewitchings, crimes.—E. Johanneau.
 171. penult. which ever some, which even some.
 176. a matter so dangerous, a matter in itself so dangerous.
 177. we, A and B; omitted in C.
 178. it was vehement, i.e., grief was vehement.—Le Clerc.
 179. doting . . . doth charge, doting idleness of our age, and crazed condition of our health, doth charge.
 181. if no generous minde, it is no generous mind that.
 181. A colon is needed at "duty."
 181. have all duty, owe everything.
 183. Dion termed, Bion so pleasantly termed.
 184. l. 1. A full stop should follow "boy."
 184. broode, bargain.—Coste.
 187. No full stop is needed between "him" and "As."
 190. ult. After "able" add "otherwise."
 191. and so ranged . . . of them. Not in M.
 192. A full stop is needed after "war-like coaches," but no break is needed after "tokens."
 193. or as wee say . . . debts. Not in M.
 194. impoyment of it, i.e., of expenditure.
 196. the onely, the only one.
 198. receive aids . . . name, receive aids gratuitous in name only.

Page

200. carved, A and B; curious, C.
 200. statues, figures [or works] and statues.
 204. ult. of any body, by one person.
 205. renowned, B; renowned, A; renowned, C.
 205. as we see but a least part of it, as we do not see.
 207. instructed, won.—Coste.
 208. never so much . . . any beast, not only never seen a horse, but had never seen any beast.
 210. reparation, A; reputation, B and C.
 210. penult. to, A; omitted in B and C.
 212. l. 2. perswaded, advised.
 218. handfuls, hands.
 219. Omit the full stop after “workes” and supply “with.”
 220. the carriage they needed, their burden.
 223. and who biddeth, whosoever biddeth.
 223. wonderfully, A; wonderfull, B and C.
 226. saint, goddess.
 227. Their good qualities, i.e., those of princes.—Coste.
 228. revenge himself of, avail himself of [or, be the better for].
 229. who hath, i.e., he who hath.
 231. invincible, impossible.
 233. importunity, A; opportunity, B and C.
 234. l. 3. who wadeth, i.e., he who wadeth.
 235. severall times, twenty times.
 235. After “advertise me” add “yea, at my own expense.”
 236. made a collection of, received.—Coste.
 236. so nicely yeeld our sense unto it, render our sentiment so delicate.
 238. mutinie, A; mutine, B and C.
 239. with injuries, with downright injuries.
 239. Dutch, German.
 239. arte, A and B; atte, C.
 241. then [= than] with the impertinency, B and A; omitted in C.
 244. restraint, refrain (= saying).
 244. pinch . . . armes, pierce ourselves with our own weapons.
 246. for his owne discharge and acquital, to purge himself.
 246. it should, i.e., the sin should.
 247. healed as many, healed three.
 247. in his art, in the usage of his art.
 249. costly, A; coastly, B and C.

Page

250. check, A; checke, B; cheke, C.
 251. After "establish" add "by this one act."
 251. Yea . . . passe. Should be in quotation marks.
 251. beene, A and B; bin, C.
 252. rest, A; rew, B and C.
 255. Tragedies, Comedies.
 255. So should those say, So should most of those say.
 255. perswaded, counselled.
 255. they afterward . . . God. Not in M.
 256. out commeth . . . mischiefe, dagger in hand.
 257. After "beyond my intent" add "and my hope."
 257. prevent, anticipate.
 257. ult. then [= than], A; and, B and C.
 258. by shrugs and crinches, in detail.
 258. randan, A and B; random, C.
 258. They [The, A; ? = they]; to, B and C.
 259. l. 3. they, A; omitted in B and C.
 261. hanging downe, cheerfully hanging down.
 268. indiscreetly, A; discreetly, B and C.
 268. not, A; omitted in B and C.
 269. abide, A; bide, B and C.
 270. by naturall motions, my natural motions.
 270. In breefe, In gross (= in the main).

INDEX OF WORDS

In the case of words of frequent occurrence the first appearance is, as a rule, the only one given.

A = Florio, 1603; B = Florio, 1613; C = Florio, 1632; M = Montaigne.

ABJECTION, lowering, 126.
 ACCORDED, agreed, 71.
 ADDRESSE, direct, 51.
 ADMIRATION, amazement, 254.
 ADO, to do, 90, 95.
 ADVERTISED, warned, 86, etc.
 A FEARDE, afraid, 182.
 AFFECT, feign, 54, 124, 238; incline towards, 47, etc.
 AFORE HAND, beforehand, 239, 259.
 ALLEDGE, quote, 55.
 ALLOWETH, commends, 177, etc.
 ALONGST, "a. the Sea," by the sea-shore, 211.
 ALOOFE OF, at a distance, 248.
 AMAINE, with power, 185, 253.
 A MANY, several, 186.
 AMITIES, friendships, 52, etc.
 AMPLENESSE, sufficiency, 203.
 A NIGHTS, at night, 66.
 ANKRED, anchored, 31.
 A PART, apart, 268.
 APPALED, rendered pale, 82.
 APPARANCE, appearance, show, 11, etc.
 ARTIZE, "a. nature," 'paint the lily,' 147.
 ASSAY, try, 72.
 ASTONY, startle, 188.
 ATTAINTS, injuries, 237.
 ATTEDIATE, weary, 265.
 AUCTORITIES, authorities, 171, etc.
 AUDITORY, audience, 81, 147.
 AUTHORITY, authority, 247.
 A VIE, straightway, 173; avye, willingly, 220.

AVOID, leave, 212.
 AVOUCHED, confessed, asserted, 135, etc.
 AWEFULL, reverential, 207.
 A WORK, to work, 191.
 BAND, bandy, oppose, 248.
 BANDY, toss to and fro, a tennis term, 135.
 BANKET, banquet, 201, 263.
 BASTARDIZE, degenerate, 159, 232.
 BAWDIE, dirty, 113, 164.
 BEARETH, "b. the ordinary custome of men," the ordinary custom of men allows, 92; justifies, 122.
 BEBUSIED, occupied (Bee-b. in A.), 144.
 BECAUSE, in order that, 111.
 BECKE, nod, 120, 158.
 BEDROWLE, catalogue, originally a list of people to be prayed for, 245.
 BEING, having, 154, 196.
 BEMOILED, besmeared, 122.
 BERAY THE PANIER, befoul the basket, 109.
 BEWRAY, reveal, betray, 3, etc.
 BIAS, BYAS, inclination, tendency (a term in bowls), 63, etc.
 BIRLADY, By our Lady, 115.
 BLABBING, chattering, 126.
 BLAZON, trumpet forth, 137.
 BLEARED, rendered dim, 228, 240.
 BLOCKISHNES, stupidity, 82, 124, 162.

- BLOOD-WIPES, cuts, 176.
 BONIFIE, "to b.," to do a kindness, 154.
 BOUT, act, 168.
 BRABLING, quarrelling, 239.
 BRACHMANIAN, Brahmin, 60.
 BRAUN, brawn, muscle, 82.
 BROKAGE, mediation, sale, 135, 141.
 BRUITE, noise, 35.
 BUCKLE, contend, engage, 79.
 BURLY, stout, huge, 192.
 BUSIE, employ, 50, 74.
 BY KINDE, by natural propensity, 119.
 BY TALE, by number, 257.
 BY WRONG, unjustly, 125.
- CALIVERS, muskets, guns, 191.
 CANVASING, pleading, 266.
 CAPITALL, heinous, 163.
 CAPITULATE, bargain, 9.
 CAPSULA TOTÆ, perfumed from head to foot, a term applied by Seneca to the fops of his day (Coste), 55.
 CARKING, anxious care, 47, 179.
 CASTING-COUNTERS, mechanical aids in calculation, 254.
 CATARS, catarrhs, colds, 47.
 CAUTERIZED, burned, seared, 229.
 CAVEAT, warning, 20.
 CAWCY, causeway, 219.
 CHAFING, fretting, 84, 151, 236.
 CHAP, cleave, 201.
 CHARGE, office, employment, 20, etc.
 CHARGE, burden, expense, 19, etc.
 CHEAPE, "good c.," cheaply, 37.
 CHECKE-ROULE, counterpart, 59.
 CHEVERELL, tender, 19.
 CLAPPE, onset, 77.
 CLAWES, nails, 234.
 CLIMATE, region, district, 33.
 CLOAKE, cover, hide, 164.
 CLOSE - CONVEYANCES, underhand tricks, 173.
 COAFERS, coffer, chests, 199.
 COASTING, running by the side, 233.
 COB-NUT, "the childish game Cob-nut; or (rather) the throwing of a Ball at a heape of Nuts, which done, the thrower takes as many as he hath hit, or scattered" (Cotgrave), 89.
 COCKET, pert, saucy, 172.
- COILE, "keepe a c.," make a tumult or noise, 205.
 COINESSE, coyness, 57, 123.
 COLOUR, pretence, 13, etc.
 COMBER, burden, 179.
 COMMIXT, mixed, 58, etc.
 COMMODITY, advantage, 17, etc.
 COMPLEMENT, compliment, 42, 96.
 COMPLEXION, nature, 23, etc.
 COMPLOTTED, conspired, plotted, 214, 251.
 COMPOSITION, agreement, 243.
 COMPTETH, counts, 239.
 CONCEITE, belief, idea, fancy, 11, etc.
 CON-CITIZENS, fellow-citizens, 199.
 CONDITION, "of c.," by nature, 156.
 CONDUCTS, passages, 120.
 CONGRESSION, intercourse, 102.
 CONNED, learned, 60.
 CONSCIENCE, "made it a matter of c.," objected, 22.
 CONSEQUENCE, "by c.," consequently, 61.
 CONSORT, harmony (in music), 247.
 CONTESTATIONS, contests, 173, etc.
 CONTRARIED, contradicted, 234.
 CONTROVERSED, in discussion, 244.
 COPES, matches, contends, 141.
 COSENER, COUSENAGE, deceiver, deceit, 2, 3, etc.
 COUNT-BOOKES, returns, accounts, 199.
 COUNTERPOISE OF, exchange for, 95.
 COUNTERPOISED TO, balanced against, 266.
 COUNTER-ROULE, catalogue, originally a list in duplicate or counterpart, 26.
 COURSES, steps, 158.
 COVERCHEFS, hoods, 118.
 COVERT, reserved, 4.
 CRANISHES, chasms, fissures, 201.
 CRANKE, brisk, 236.
 CRASED, sickly, broken down, 2, etc.
 CRINCHES, cringes (see Note), 258.
 CRUE, crew, mob, 183.
 CULL OUT, gather, 51, 70, 146.
 CUNNING, science, knowledge, 115; clever, 81, etc.
 CUNNINGEST, cleverest, most full of understanding, 27.
 CUNNY-CATCH, deceive (cunny = rabbit), 208.

CUPPING GLASSES, glasses used in bleeding, 94.
CURIOUSLY, purposely, carefully, 1, etc.

DAINED, deigned, 267.
DANTED, daunted, 216.
DASTARDISE, feebleness, 169.
DEBONARETY, gentleness, 23, 256.
DECLINATION, decline, 205, 207.
DEDUCTION, discourse, narration, 265.
DELAY, "d. him," hold him back, 176.
DEMISS, cowardly, 31, 267, 270.
DEROGATION, detraction, 51.
DESPIGHT, ill-will, 129.
DEVISE, imagine, 170.
DEVOIRE, duty, 123, 268.
DEW GUARD, Dieu vous garde (God be with you), 158.
DIE, dye, 24.
DIRECTING, capable of teaching or leading, 248.
DISCHARGE, free, 75.
DISCOURSE, reason, 63.
DISCOVERED, opened, uncovered, 190.
DISGUISEMENTS, disguises, 145.
DISINTERESSED OF, not mixed up in, 43.
DISNATURING, "d. themselves," cutting themselves adrift from nature, 155.
DISSIGNES, designs, 107, 108, 148.
DISTASTED, condemned, 96; sicken, 140, etc.
DISTEMPERED, disordered, 140, etc.
DOMAGEABLE, damageable, 241.
DRAUGHTS, drawings, 120.
DRIFT, aim, purpose, 72, 148, 241.
DRY-BLOWES, thumps, bruises, 176.

EARNESTETH, strengthens, 232.
EARST, formerly, 30.
EFTSOONES, also, 186.
ELL, a measure, 232.
ELS, else, 252.
EMBARRICADO, barricade, 192.
EMOTION, motion, 218.
EMPAIRETH, grow worse, 14, etc.
EMPEACHED, hindered, 2, etc.
EMPOYSNING, poisoning, 162.
ENABLED, strengthened, 141.

ENCHASED, ornamented, 200.
ENCIVILIZED, civilised, 218.
ENDEARE, enrich, value at a higher rate, 141, 145.
ENDENISON, settle down, naturalise, 109.
ENDIGHT, dictate, 66.
ENEMY, inimical, 107.
ENGENDERETH, creates, 29.
EN-RHEUMED, enfeebled, 92.
ENSTALLING, displaying, spreading abroad, 158, 249.
ENTER-ADVERTISE, mutually warn, 261.
ENTERLEND, mutually lend; ENTER-OWE, mutually owe, 61.
ENTERMIXE, mix, 240, 265.
ENTER-SPOILE, mutually spoil, 225.
ENTREATED, treated, 211.
ENURED, accustomed, 52, 57, 222.
ENVY, "in e. of," in emulation of, 251.
ESCHEW, avoid, 155.
ESSAY, endeavour, 27, 173, 225.
ESTRIDGES, ostriches, 192, 200.
EVITATED, avoided, 230.
EXCERCITATION, employment, 34.
EXEMPLAR, exemplary, 205, 223.
EXIGENT, necessity, exigency, 74.
EXINATION, extreme emptiness, 241.
EXPERIENCE, routine, 252.
EXPLOYTING, "e. whereof," producing this, 13.
EXQUISITE, scrupulous, 180.

FAINE, "would f.," would desire to, 247.
FAINED, feigned, 13, etc.
FAST AND LOOSE, the game of easily freeing oneself, for a wager, from apparently securely tied rope, 240.
FEATLY, deftly, 8, 249.
FEBRICITANT, feverish, 158.
FELLEST, deadliest, 24.
FENCE, arguments, 240.
FESTERETH, inflames, 137.
FIERCE, lofty, proud, 188.
FITTES, "by f.," continually, 92.
FLEAD, flayed, 117.
FLEARING, grinning, 85.
FLEETE flee, 150.

- FLEETING, flight, 157.
 FLESH, strengthen, 121.
 FLOUT, scoff, sneer, 137, 139, 244.
 FLUSH, render gay or splendid, 146.
 FLUX, torrent, 185.
 FOND, foolish, 51, etc.
 FOND-HARDILY, in a foolhardy manner, 164.
 FORAGED, plundered, 126.
 FORCE, mental power, 236.
 FOREPAST, past, 87.
 FORGED, made, 29, 50, 71.
 FORMALIZETH, discontents, 243.
 FORME, manner, fashion, 37, etc.
- GAGES, engagements, 5.
 GAINE-SAY, contradict, 26, etc.
 GALLANTIZE, adorn in an affected manner, 146.
 GALLIOTTE, "a small Galley, or Galley-like vessell, having twenty Oares on a side, and two or three Rowers to an Oare; much used by Turkish, and Moorish, Rovers" (Cotgrave), 191.
 GARBE, grace, 184.
 GATE, gait, 60.
 GHESSE, guess, 31, 120, 249.
 GIBBRISH, jargon, rubbish, 146.
 GIBE, sneer, 260.
 GINGLETH, rings, jingles, 80.
 GLADDED, pleased, 85, 88.
 GLEW, glue, 149.
 GLISTRING, glistening, 208.
 GODAMERCY, "G. his trade," thanks to his trade, 38.
 GOWNE-CLARKES, Lawyers, Masters of Art, 247.
 GRATULATION, joy, 260.
 GUELDED, mutilated, 119.
 GULL, deceive, 70; simpleton, 114, 142.
 GULLISH, foolish, 127, 243, 254.
- HABILLIMENTS, garments, 250.
 HAB OR NAB, "at h.," at a venture, 269.
 HAFTED, handled, 259.
 HALETH, drags, 87.
 HALTRED, haltered, 149.
 HAND-WHILE, "every h.-w.," continually, at short intervals, 91, 267.
- HANDY-DANDY (originally applied to the children's game, "Which hand will you have?"), sleight of hand, 259.
 HANDY-GRIPES, close grasp, 185.
 HANDY-SPORTS, practical jokes, 261.
 HAPPILY, haply, 37, etc.
 HARDLY, barely, 146, 147.
 HARGUEBUSES, HARQUEBUSES, guns, 209, 191.
 HARPE, touch, 261.
 HARRIE, vex, 136.
 HECTICKE, consumptive, 161.
 HEEDILY, carefully, 149, etc.
 HETEROCLITE, irregular, 243.
 HIES, flies, 123.
 HIS, a popular though false form of the genitive, 24, etc.
 HOISED-FULL, well hoisted, 52.
 HOLDE FAST, grasp, 150, 180.
 HONESTIE, honour, 135, 136.
 HUDLED, collected (not necessarily in a confused manner), 102, etc.
 HUGGER MUGGER, secretly, in the dark, 2.
 HUSBAND, manager, economiser, 199.
- ILL MAY THE KILL CALL THE OVEN BURNT TAILE, Ill may the pot call the kettle black, 186.
 IMPASSIBLE, passionless, 225.
 IMPUGNED, doubted, 234.
 IMPULSIONS, impulses, 253.
 IMPUTATION, blame, 187.
 INCITATION, incitement, 224.
 INCIZED, cut, 229.
 INDIFFERENTLY, sufficiently, 38.
 INDURATE, obdurate, 82.
 IN EFFECT, in the end, 65.
 IN FINE, in the end, 243.
 IN GROSSE, as a whole, in the main, 80, 164, 270.
 INHIBITION, denial, 141.
 INKE-POT, pedantic, 145.
 INQUISITION, inquiry, 242.
 IN REGARD OF, in comparison with, 162.
 IN RESPECT OF, in comparison with, 171, etc.; rather than, 233.
 INSTANTLY, urgently, 130, 264.
 IN STEADE, instead, 220.

INSTITUTED, directed, 138.
 INSTITUTION, training, 35, etc.
 IN SUMMUM, finally, 72, 121.
 INTENDER, soften, tender, 82.
 INTENT, intention, 71, 257.
 INTENTIVE, intently, 204.
 INTERESSED, concerned, 69, 131, 225;
 wronged, injured, 104, 125.
 INVITINGS, conducting, 58.
 ISE, ice, 160.

JOCONDLY, jubilantly, 11, 92.
 JOUSTES, tournaments, 226.
 JOISSANCE, enjoyment, pleasure, 158,
 etc.
 JUGLER, tumbler, player, 32, 240.
 JUGLING, playing, acting, 82.
 JUMPE, agree, 43, etc.

KAE MEE ILE KAE THEE, Comb me
 and I'll comb thee, 139.
 KNOWNE, advowed, 183.
 KONNE YOU NO THANKS, do not
 thank you, 258.
 KUE, cue, direction, 63.

LAW, leisure, liberty, 56.
 LEAST, lest, 87, 154, 159.
 LEAUDNESSE, malice, lewdness, 47, 136.
 LEAVE, cease, 255.
 LECHARD, unlawful, 105.
 LECHARDES, lovers, 104.
 LEST, least, 174, 246.
 LIGHT, alight, 52.
 LIST, wished, chose, 65, etc.
 LISTES END, narrow strip, 158.
 LIVELIEST, strongest, 4.
 LIVELY, vivid, brilliant, natural, 12,
 etc.
 LOGGER HEADS, blockheads, 142.
 LOLLING, reclining, 101.
 LOOSETH THEM, ruins them, 145.
 LOWTINGS, bowings, 97.
 LUBBERLY, clumsily, 169.
 LUMINARIES, lamps, 153.
 LUMPISH, heavy, 182.
 LUSTER, lustre, adornment, aspect,
 27, etc.
 LYRA, lyre, 231.

MAGISTRALE, severe, 256, 260.
 MAINE, vast, 201.
 MAINELY, urgently, 191.
 MANNAGE, handle horses, 226.
 MANURING, cultivation, 210, 255.
 MARCHANDIZE, commerce, 211.
 MARRY, an oath, 43, 182.
 MASSAKER, massacre, 3.
 MASSIE, massive, substantial, 81, 144.
 MASTIVE, mastiff, 192.
 MASTRY, MAISTRY, mastery, 224, 225.
 MATRIX, womb, 120.
 MEANE, middle, 222.
 MEERELY, purely, 5, etc.
 MEMORIOUS, memorable, 264.
 MERY, merry, 88.
 MINATORIE, menacing, 212.
 MINSINGLY, mincingly, 54.
 MINSTERELL HARLOT, singing courtesan or actress, 192.
 MISDONE, done amiss, 229.
 MOITY, portion, half, 156, 171.
 MONOPOLIES, cabals, intrigues, 130.
 MOODIE, mad, 127, etc.
 MOOVEAELES, furniture, goods, 193, 217.
 MORTALL, deadly, 129, etc.
 MOTION, emotion, 175.
 MOULTRED AWAY, mouldered or melted away, 246.
 MUMPES AND MOWES, mumblings and
 grimaces, 85.
 MUNITION, fortifying material, 65.
 MURTHERING, murdering, 162.
 MUSTILY, mouldy, 47.
 MYSTICALL, mysterious, 114.

NAMELY, especially, 30, etc.
 NEARE, nearly, 241.
 NEARELY, closely, 11, etc.
 NEW-FANGLES, novelties, 207.
 NICE, scrupulous, 51, etc.
 NICKE, point, moment, 259.
 NINNY, fool, 222.
 NIPPING, biting, sarcastic, 250.
 NONCE, "for the n.," for the time, 51.
 NOTHING, in no way, 146, 156.
 NULLITY, effeminacy, 192.

OF, off, 240.
 ONELY, alone, sole, 2, etc.

OPINIONATE, obstinate, 124.
 OTHES, oaths, 159.
 OUT OF HAND, immediately, 255.
 OUTRECUIDANCE, arrogance, 260.
 OUTSLIPS, sallies, 269.
 OVER-PEARING, overlooking, high,
 67.

PAILLARDISE, obscenity, uncleanness, 228.

PARGETTINGS, parquetry, 96.

PASSIONATE, impassionate, 82.

PATE, head, 140.

PANDERIZING, selling for an evil purpose, 141.

PAVESADO, "any Targuet-fence; especially that of Galleys, whereby the slaves are defended from the small shot of the enemy" (Cotgrave), 191.

PEECE-MEALS, "by p.-m.," bit by bit, 65.

PELL-MELL, in a confused manner, 152.

PELTED, abused, assailed, 126.

PEREGRINATION, journey, 65.

PESTRED, bothered, 49, 85.

PILLAGE, spoil, 148.

PITHY, substantial, 145, 146.

PLAINETH, complains, 152.

PLAST, placed, 185.

PLAUSIBLE, agreeable, 59.

PLODDING, hard-working, 232, 249.

POISING, weighing, 81, 248.

POLAXES, hatchets, 90.

POSSIBLE, possibly, 193.

POSTERNE, gate, 133.

POWTINGS, grimaces, 247.

PRACTISE, bribe, 200; plotted, 214.

PRATTLE, chatter, 139.

PRAY, prey, 38.

PREDICAMENT, category, class, 72.

PRENTISAGES, apprenticeships, 259.

PRESENTLY, immediately, 10, etc.

PREVAILE, "how to p.," how to value themselves, 158.

PREVENT, interrupt, 237.

PRICKLINGS, scratches, 90.

PRINCKOCK BOY, saucy boy, 184.

PRIVIE, witness, 169.

PROPER, own, 179, etc.

PROTRACT, dispense, defer, 36;
 deaden, allay, 78.

PROULES, makes prey of, 82.

PTHISICKE, consumptive, 132.

PUDICITIE, virginity, 134.

PURLING, rippling, 202.

PURLOYNED, kept back, 9.

PURLOYNING, theft, 157.

QUAILE, disprove, 176; subdue, 178.

QUAINT, elegant, dainty, 109, etc.

QUAINTNESSE, elegance, 107.

QUARIE, prey, 139.

QUEST, search, 238, 241.

QUESTION, "made a q.," doubted, 121, 169.

QUICKE, life, alive, 120, 243, 266.

QUIT, leave, 260.

QUOIFED SERJANTS, bewigged lawyers, 247.

QUOIFES, hoods, 118.

RAPORT, equal, 11.

RANDAN, "at r.," at large, 237, 258.

RATABLY, equivalently, 223.

REDISH, radish, 127.

REDOUBTED, renowned, 247.

REGENCV, teaching, ruling, 234.

REGENTS, teachers, rulers, 56, 162.

REKE, care for, 159.

REMISNESSE, weakness, 215.

RESPECTIVE, respectful, 157.

RESTV, stubborn, restive, 163.

RETCHLESNESSE, recklessness, not chalance, 142.

RETORTABLE, answerable, 244.

REVENGE, retaliation, 261.

REVIRADOES, retorts, 257.

RHEUME, cold, inflammation, 73, 95.

RIDDE AWAY, take away, 140.

RING, curb, fasten up, 136.

ROULE, roll, 56, 192, 205.

ROUNDLY, thoroughly, openly, 3, 267.

RUTH, pity, 74, 215.

SACIETY, satiety, 177.

SANCE, sans, without, 53.

SAVEGARDE, safety, 18.

SCABBE, rind, crust, 77.

SCOT-FREE, entirely free, 138.

SELD, rare, 165.
 SELD-SEENE, seldom-seen, 217
 SEMBLABLE, similar, 71.
 SEMINARY, nursery, seed-garden, 265.
 SEVERALL, separate, 108, etc.
 SHAMEFASTNESSE, modesty, 154.
 SHIFT, plan, device, 121, 258
 SHIFTING, changing, 79.
 SHOOE HIS BOULT, have his turn,
 unburden himself, 256.
 SHOURE, shower, 71.
 SIDELING, sideways, 228.
 SILLY, simple, 209.
 SINGULAR, unique, 126.
 SINNOWIE, sinewy, muscular, 144,
 etc.
 SKREENE, a hand-barrow or litter,
 64.
 SLEEKED, plastered up, smoothed
 out, 183.
 SLEIGHT, slight, 170, 265
 SMOAKE, air, 16.
 SODAINELY, suddenly, 209.
 SOMETHING, somewhat, 47.
 SOOTH-UP, humour, 228.
 SORTED, compared, arranged, 248.
 SOTTISHNESSE, foolishness, 29, etc.
 SOUTERLY, vulgar, low, 122.
 SOWRENESSE, sourness, 139.
 SPETTLE, spittle, 268.
 SPIGHT, annoyance, anger, spite, 109,
 etc.
 SPUR-BLINDE, purblind, dim-sighted, 228.
 SQUARE, equal, arrange, agree, 11, etc.
 SQUAT, cast down, 169.
 STATELY, magnificently, 193.
 STEAD, serve, 123, 188, 228.
 STEEPV, steep, 74, 202.
 STEWS, brothel, 96.
 STORAX, a fragrant gum, 201.
 STORKE, framework, building, 120; abundance, 146, etc.
 STORY, history, 264.
 STRAGLE, wander, 268.
 STREAKES, rays, streams, 157, 202
 STRIKE SAILE, yield, 174.
 SUBSISTING, inherent, 85.
 SUBTILIZE, "to s.," to split hairs, 241.
 SUFFERANCE, endurance, 140, etc.
 SUFFICIENT, able, 28, etc.
 SURPAY, overpay, 150.

SUTE, compare, 223
 SWATH, girdle, 191.
 SYLLABIZE, talk in an affected manner, 54.
 TABLES, the old game of backgammon
 or draughts, 90.
 TARGATTIER, a soldier who carried a buckler or shield, 191.
 TEASTY, irritable, 237.
 TEMPER, temperance, moderation, 7.
 TENOUR, pace, 144.
 THEN, than, 9, etc.
 THOROW, through, 117, 119
 THOROWLY, thoroughly, 213
 TILTINGS, tournaments, 220.
 TOPSIE-TURVIED, turned upside down, 211.
 TRANSCHANGE, change, 84
 TRAVELL, work, labour, 122
 TRILLING, rolling, 185.
 TRUDGING, weary or laborious walking, 122.
 TURNEABLE, facile, pliable, 43.
 UN-BESOT, release, render wise, 171.
 UNDAUNTED, undaunted, 188, 209, 213.
 UNFAINEDLY, sincerely, 136, 207.
 UNHEEDINESSE, carelessness, 244.
 UNSOTIABLE, unsociable, 47.
 UNVALUABLE, invaluable, 22, 199.
 VACATIONS, vocations, 12, 50, 179.
 VAILETH, bows down, 247.
 VANTETH, boasts, 39.
 VARDINGALL, robe, hooped-petticoat,
 121.
 VENERY, lust, 110.
 VIRGINALLES, keyed musical instruments, precursors of the pianoforte, 247.
 VOID, in diameter, 66.
 VULGAR, ordinary, common, 135, etc.
 WALLOWISH, insipid, 181
 WARD, guard, 87; position, 189, 261.
 WARRANT, excuse, 21, 95.
 WARRANT AND WARDE, "to w. and
 w.," to shelter and shield, 19.

- WAYETH, weighs, 239.
 WAYMENTINGS, laments, 83.
 WEeping CROSSE, a penitent's cross
 on the highway for devotions, 108.
 WEERISH, worthless, withered, 142.
 WHIT, "no w." in no way, 19, 75
 162.
 WHOTTE, hot, 102.
 WILIE-BEGUILIES, quibbles, 269.
 WIMPLED, furrowed, 93.
 WINDOWEN, supplied with windows,
 66.
 WIRE-DRAWES, extends, draws out,
 40. 158. 261.
 WISHLV, earnestly, 73.
 WIT, understanding, mind. 11 etc.
 WITNESSE, testify, 69.
 WITTINGLY, knowingly, 80.
 WITTLY-WARY, earnestly careful, 138.
 WORKES AGAINST THE WOOLL, g &c
 against the grain, 133.
 WOT, know, 29, etc.
 WREST, bend, strain, 49, etc.
 YEELDE, render, 20, 231.
 YEILD, consent, 18.
 YERNETH, grieves, 81.

3 1158 01097 6255

UC SOUTHERN REGIONAL LIBRARY FACILITY

B 000 002 381 2

STAC